Transport

RAILWAYS

The Saudi Government Railroad is a single track, standard gauge line 571 km long. In addition, the total length of spur lines and sidings is 170 km. The main line connects Dammam Port at the Arabian Gulf with Riyadh, and passes Dhahran, Abqaiq, Hufuf, Harad and al-Kharj. A 322-km direct line from Hufuf to Riyadh was under construction in 1983: the first section, 150 km long, opened in 1984, and the line was due for completion in 1985.

Saudi Rails: POB 92, Dammam; tel. (3) 871-3001; telex 601050; an independent entity with a Board of Directors headed by the Minister of Communications; Pres. Faysal M. al-Shehail.

ROADS

Asphalted roads link Jeddah to Mecca, Jeddah to Medina, Medina to Yanbu, Ta'if to Mecca, Riyadh to al-Kharj, and Dammam to Hufuf as well as the principal communities and certain outlying points in Aramco's area of operations. Work is proceeding on various other roads, including one which will link Medina and Riyadh. A road from Ta'if to Jizan in the south, near the Yemeni border, was officially opened in 1976. The trans-Arabian highway, linking Dammam, Riyadh, Ta'if, Mecca and Jeddah, was completed in 1967. Between 1970 and 1983, the length of paved roads expanded at an annual average rate of 10.6%. In 1983 there were 26,000 km of tarmac roads and 38,644 km of dirt roads. Metalled roads link all the main population centres.

SHIPPING

The ports of Jeddah, Dammam, Yanbu, Gizan, Jubail Commercial and King Fahd Industrial Port in Jubail, as well as a number of minor ports, are under the exclusive management of the Ports Authority. In 1983 the total capacity of Saudi ports (excluding oil terminals) was 49m. tons per year.

Jeddah is the principal port and the main point of entry for pilgrims bound for Mecca. It has general cargo, container, ro-ro, bulk cement and bulk-grain berths, with draughts ranging from 8 m to 14 m. The port also has a 200-ton floating crane.

Dammam is the second largest port and has general cargo, container, ro-ro, bulk cement and bulk grain berths. Draughts at this port range from 9 m to 14 m; and it has a 200-ton floating crane.

Yanbu is Saudi Arabia's nearest major port to Europe and North America, and is the focal point of the most rapidly growing area, in the west of Saudi Arabia. It has general cargo, ro-ro and bulk cement berths. The draughts range from 10 m to 12 m.

Gizan is the main port for the southern part of the country. It has general cargo, ro-ro, bulk cement and container berths with draughts ranging from 8 m to 12 m.

Jubail has two ports, commercial and industrial. The commercial port has general cargo and container berths with ro-ro facilities. Draughts range from 12 m to 14 m. The industrial port has bulk cargo and ro-ro berths, and an Open Sea Tanker Terminal. Draughts range from 6 m to 30 m.

In addition to these major ports, there are a number of minor ports suitable only for small craft, including Khuraiba, Haql, Alwajh, Umlujj, Rabigh, Al Lith, Qunfoudah, Farasan and Alqahma on the Red Sea coast and Alkhobar, Qatif, Uqair, Darin and Ras Al Khafji on the Arabian Gulf coast. Ras Mishab on the Arabian Gulf coast is operated by the Ministry of Defence and Aviation.

CIVIL AVIATION

In April 1981 a new international airport in Jeddah, the King Abdul Aziz International Airport, was opened. It has three terminals, one of which is specifically designed to cope with the needs of the many thousands of pilgrims who visit Mecca each year. This is one of three airports being built under the auspices of the International Airports Projects of Saudi Arabia, founded in 1976. The King Khalid International Airport, at Riyadh, opened in 1983: with four terminals, it should handle 7.5m. passengers per year initially, and by the year 2000 its capacity should have doubled. The third, the New Eastern Province Airport, is planned for the Eastern Province. In 1983, plans for a further international airport, at Dhahran, were finalized, along with expansion projects for Ta'if, Tabuk, Medina and Al Jawf. Expansion of domestic airports began in 1984.

Atomic Energy

Saudi Arabia joined the International Atomic Energy Agency in January 1963. Radio isotopes are used in the oil industry and are being introduced into state-controlled agricultural schemes.

SENEGAL

Introductory Survey

Location, Climate, Language, Religion, Flag, Capital

The Republic of Senegal lies on the west coast of Africa, bordered to the north by Mauritania, to the east by Mali, and to the south by Guinea and Guinea-Bissau. In the southern part of the country, The Gambia forms a narrow enclave extending some 320 km (200 miles) inland. The climate is tropical, with a long dry season followed by a short wet season. The average annual temperature is about 29°C (84°F). French is the official language but the three main language groups, with their principal languages, are: Senegalo-Guinean (Wolof, Serer and Diola), Mandé (Bambara and Sarakolé) and Peulh (Toucouleur and Peul). About 90% of the population are Muslims and about 5% Christians, mostly Roman Catholics. The remainder follow traditional beliefs. The national flag (proportions 3 by 2) has three equal vertical stripes, of green, gold and red, with a five-pointed green star in the centre of the gold stripe. The capital is Dakar.

Recent History

In November 1958, after 300 years as a French colony, Senegal became a self-governing member of the French Community. The formation in April 1959 of a Mali Federation, linking Senegal with the former French Sudan, was not successful, and the entity had only two months of independence before being dissolved when Senegal seceded, to become a separate independent state, on 20 August 1960. The Republic of Senegal was proclaimed on 5 September, with Léopold Sédar Senghor elected to be the country's first President. Relations with France remain close, and France maintains military bases in Senegal.

In 1962 President Senghor removed the Prime Minister, Mamadou Dia, from office and took over the post himself. After a decisive win for his party, the Union progressiste sénégalaise (UPS), in the National Assembly elections of 1963, President Senghor gradually absorbed or outlawed other political parties to create a one-party state by 1966. However, Senghor recreated the office of Prime Minister in 1970 and appointed to it a young man, Abdou Diouf, who in 1976 was made Senghor's constitutional successor. In 1973 Senghor, the sole candidate, was re-elected as President.

President Senghor fulfilled his promise of a gradual return to multi-party democracy by freeing all political prisoners in 1974 and by amending the Constitution in March 1976 to allow three parties to contest elections. The first multi-party elections under the new provisions were held in November 1976, when voting took place for municipal councils in two regions. In December the UPS was re-formed as the Parti socialiste (PS), which became the democratic socialist party provided for in the Constitution. The Parti démocratique sénégalais (PDS) was recognized as the liberal democratic party. The Parti africain de l'indépendance (PAI) was accepted as the Marxist-Leninist faction, but the more widely-based Rassemblement national démocratique (RND) was refused recognition. In December 1978 the Mouvement républicain sénégalais (MRS) was granted recognition as a right-wing party. There was support within the PS and from the marabouts (the leaders of the Islamic sects who represent 80% of the total population and whose influence increased after the Iranian revolution) for a more flexible political system.

The first nationwide elections under the three-party system were held in February 1978. The PS won 83 of the 100 seats in the National Assembly, the remainder being won by the PDS. In the concurrent presidential election, Senghor overwhelmingly defeated the leader of the PDS, Abdoulaye Wade. A new Government was formed in March. Diouf carried out a reshuffle in September, dismissing his rival, Babacar Ba.

In November 1980 Senegal sent troops into The Gambia, under a mutual assistance accord, to protect the Gambian Government from an alleged threat of invasion by Libyan forces, but the Senegalese were withdrawn shortly afterwards. President Senghor retired in December 1980. The former Prime Minister, Abdou Diouf, succeeded him as Head of State and reorganized the Council of Ministers. He also declared an amnesty for political offenders, and amended the Constitution to allow the existence of more than four political parties. Elections in February 1983 brought overwhelming victory for Diouf, who received 83.5% of the presidential vote, and for his PS, which won 111 of the 120 seats in the National Assembly. The PDS won eight seats, and the RND only one. Disputing the results, the Government's opponents decided to boycott meetings of the Assembly. After a five-month protest, most opposition members responded to the President's appeal for national unity and were present at the Assembly's opening session in November 1983. In a government reshuffle in April 1983, Diouf continued his purge of the more established party 'barons', and assumed greater powers for his own office by abolishing the post of Prime Minister. Habib Thiam, the former Prime Minister, was appointed President of the National Assembly.

Following an attempted coup against the Gambian Government in July 1981, Senegalese troops again intervened in The Gambia, and in August plans to merge the two countries were announced. The confederation of Senegambia thus came into being on 1 February 1982 (see p. 1695), and in January 1984 the Council of Ministers and Confederal Assembly held their inaugural meetings. Negotiations on economic and monetary union were in progress in 1985.

Growing resentment against the Government of Senegal in the southern province of Casamance, which is virtually cut off from the rest of Senegal by the neighbouring territory of The Gambia, erupted in December 1983, when there were violent clashes between the police and members of the Casamance separatist movement in the provincial capital of Ziguinchor. At least 25 people were killed in the disturbances, which followed the imprisonment of 32 members of the Casamance Movement of Democratic Forces (MFDC) who had been involved in anti-government demonstrations in December 1982. After an Extraordinary Congress of the PS in January 1984, the Casamance and Sine Saloum regions were divided into smaller administrative areas, in a move towards greater political representation.

A two-month boycott of classes by university students in Dakar ended in May 1984, after the Government pledged to introduce measures to curb graduate unemployment. In April 1984 Habib Thiam resigned as President of the National Assembly, following the Assembly's approval of a constitutional amendment reducing the mandate of its President from five years to one. Amidst growing dissension within the PS, the Minister of Foreign Affairs, Moustapha Niasse, was dismissed from the Government in October 1984. Tension within the regional party bases also became evident, as moves to replace veteran PS members in key local positions with people who were more committed to President Diouf led to outbreaks of violence in several towns.

At elections for municipal and regional councils in November 1984, the PS won 96% of the total vote and took control of every council in the country. The elections were boycotted by the PDS and other major opposition parties, who declared them undemocratic and demanded electoral reform. A minor government reshuffle was carried out in January 1985, following the resignation from the Government of two ministers who had been elected as mayors in the local elections.

Government

Legislative power rests with the unicameral National Assembly, with 120 members elected for five years by universal adult suffrage. Executive power is held by the President, also directly elected for five years at the same time as the Assembly. The President appoints and leads a Council of Ministers. The post of Prime Minister was abolished in 1983. Senegal comprises 10 regions, each with an appointed Governor, an elected local assembly and a separate budget.

Defence

In July 1984 Senegal had an army of 8,500 men, a navy of 700 and an air force of 500. There were 6,800 men in paramilitary forces. Under the Senegambia confederation pact, integration with the forces of The Gambia is envisaged. Military service is selective and lasts for two years. France provides technical and material aid, and there are 1,300 French troops stationed in Senegal. Estimated defence expenditure in 1983/84 was US $53.5m.

Economic Affairs

About 70% of the population is engaged in agriculture and stock rearing. Agriculture normally provides almost one-half of Senegal's export earnings and is responsible for one-third of GDP. The economy is dominated by the production and processing of groundnuts, which were grown on approximately 40% of the country's total cultivated land area in 1984. Groundnuts and groundnut oil together normally provide about one-third of export earnings. Attempts to diversify the range of crops grown and to become self-sufficient in foodstuffs include the development of rice and tomato cultivation, with the aid of EEC funds, and investment in livestock. Large imports of rice and wheat were needed to meet food deficits in the late 1970s. The 1980 groundnut crop failed, as a result of drought and poor-quality seed, but rainfall returned to normal in 1981 and 1982, and the 1982/83 groundnut crop totalled 1,091,000 metric tons, the highest level for six years. The 1983 Sahel drought severely affected agricultural production in Senegal, and the Government launched an urgent appeal for international food aid to help to alleviate the shortfall in cereal needs, estimated at 300,000 tons. Production of cotton, Senegal's other major cash crop, fell to 30,500 tons in 1983/84, compared with 47,081 tons in the previous season, and the groundnut harvest was only 590,000 tons. However, this drop was largely offset by a recovery in world groundnut prices: earnings from groundnut exports totalled 54,800m. francs CFA in 1983/84, compared with 55,800m. francs CFA in 1982/83. A further cereal shortfall, estimated at 150,000 tons was forecast for 1984/85, and the Government renewed its appeal for food aid.

A scheme to develop the Senegal River basin (in a joint project with Mali and Mauritania) was begun in 1981. The scheme aims to control seasonal flooding and to irrigate 375,000 ha of land, of which 240,000 ha are in Senegal. The project includes construction of the Diarra dam, near St Louis, which was scheduled for completion in 1985, and will allow 120,000 ha of land to be irrigated. The fisheries sector is being developed, and has become a major source of export revenue, earning 45,000m. francs CFA in 1983. An industrial fisheries complex, with an annual capacity of 36,000 metric tons, has been constructed in Casamance, and began production in 1982. A national reafforestation campaign was begun in 1984, and aims to reverse the desertification process by replanting 140,000 ha per year for the next 25 years.

Senegal exploits deposits of lime phosphate and aluminium phosphate, both near Thiès, and the Government has a 50% share in each of the two operations. A chemical complex, built by Industries Chimiques du Sénégal, was opened in 1984, comprising a phosphatic fertilizer plant at Mbao and two factories for the production of sulphuric and phosphoric acids at Darou Khoudou. The complex processes phosphates mined at Thaiba, and has an annual capacity of 580,000 tons of sulphuric acid and 220,000 tons of phosphoric acid. Further phosphate deposits, estimated at 40m. tons, were discovered in 1984 at Matam in north-east Senegal. There are plans to exploit the extensive deposits of iron ore at Falémé, and work on a new rail link to Tambacounda and a port at Bargny is scheduled to begin in 1987. Proven reserves total 371m. tons, and production is expected to begin in 1990 with proposed annual output of 6m. tons of ore. Gold deposits have been discovered at Sabodala, and the Société Minière de Sabodala planned to start production in early 1985. Prospecting in the north for further phosphate deposits and in the east for uranium continues. Deposits of petroleum have been discovered off the coast, with indicated reserves of about 300m. metric tons. However, exploration activities have been hindered by disputes with Guinea-Bissau over maritime borders. A national oil company, Petrosen, was set up in 1981. Natural gas was discovered offshore in 1977.

The manufacturing sector is becoming increasingly developed and includes textiles, chemicals, building materials and various light industries, including food processing. The 1981–85 Plan envisaged the development of heavy industries such as steel, engineering and transport equipment. In 1981 industrial production accounted for about 15% of GDP. With the aim of attracting foreign companies and providing employment, an Industrial Free Zone was established near Dakar, but with limited success. Foreign firms operating there are free of taxes, duties and bureaucratic controls. A new bonus system was introduced in 1981, in an attempt to stimulate investment. A lack of skilled labour is, however, proving to be a major problem. In the rest of Senegal, on the other hand, a policy of 'Senegalization' is increasing state control and native management of affairs.

Senegal remains heavily dependent on foreign aid and investment. International aid totalled 170,000m. francs CFA in 1983, mainly from France, the Middle East and the USA. The high cost of imported energy, together with the drop in world phosphate prices, has aggravated Senegal's balance-of-payments situation, and in 1982 the persistent trade deficit reached 135,640m. francs CFA. The financial situation further deteriorated in 1983. Since 1980, Senegal has increased its dependence on foreign aid, particularly from the IMF, and at the end of 1983 foreign public debt totalled 720,000m. francs CFA. Agreement to reschedule part of Senegal's debt was reached with the 'Paris Club' of creditors in January 1985, following the announcement of an 18-month IMF stand-by arrangement worth SDR 76.6m. The 1983/84 economic and financial programme, supported by the IMF, succeeded in reducing the country's fiscal deficit to 4.7% of GDP, compared with 8.2% of GDP in 1982/83. As part of the programme, austerity measures were imposed, which included a reduction in state subsidies on imported staple foods, increased import taxation, and a restriction on wage increases. Further increases in the price of basic commodities, including petrol and rice, were implemented in 1984, in response to IMF pressure. An austerity plan, launched in 1984, aimed to reduce the external current account deficit to around 9.2% of GDP in 1984/85, and to 6.9% of GDP in 1985/86. State intervention in the agricultural sector was to be reduced as part of the Government's plan, and in January 1985 two state agricultural agencies were dissolved.

The sixth Development Plan (1981–85) envisaged that the annual growth rate in GDP would not exceed 4% (compared with 3% in 1980). The Plan was revised in 1983, with total proposed investment increased from 464,000m. to 667,000m. francs CFA. A seventh five-year plan was to be launched in July 1985. Senegal's high level of unemployment, estimated at 20%–30% of the labour force in 1984, is a cause of concern to the Government. An emergency plan for employment was announced in August 1984: measures included loans for job creation schemes and a revision of the investment code in favour of labour-intensive enterprises. Job creation for university graduates is a major priority. Private investment in industry is being encouraged, particularly for small and medium-sized businesses, and the tourist industry is being developed. In an attempt to reduce the petroleum import bill, alternative sources of energy (such as peat, lignite and uranium) are to be exploited.

Transport and Communications

The main railway line runs east from Dakar into Mali, while another line runs north to St Louis along the coast, with a branch to Linguera, totalling 1,034 km. Major upgrading of parts of the main line began in 1983. The road network is good, with a total length in 1981 of 14,500 km, of which over 7,000 km were passable at all seasons. A total of 462 km of new roads is to be built, financed by the UN Development Programme and foreign aid. Upgrading of 800 km of feeder roads in the east was scheduled to begin in 1984, funded by the International Development Association at an investment cost of US $3.6m. The Senegal River is used to transport goods by both Senegal and Mauritania. Dakar is the second largest port in West Africa and serves both Senegal and Mauritania. There is an international airport at Dakar, and Senegal also has numerous small airports. An extensive telecommunications plan was adopted in 1983, and the Office des Postes et Telecommunications (OPT) aims to increase telephone density from 0.33 line to one line per 100 inhabitants by 1986. Plans to set up a national telex network have been announced.

Social Welfare

Social services include a state medical service and certain family and maternity benefits for workers. In 1978 Senegal had 44 government hospitals, with a total of 5,827 beds, and there were 391 physicians working in the country.

Education

Primary education, beginning at six years of age and lasting for six years, is officially compulsory. In 1981, however, the total enrolment at primary schools of children in the relevant age-group was only 39% (boys 47%; girls 31%). The Government aims to reach 100% school attendance for primary-age children by 1995, and extra provision was made for education expenditure in the 1983/84 budget. Since 1971 education has been reorientated towards practical subjects. Pupils in secondary education, which begins at the age 12 and lasts for up to seven years, have been encouraged to follow science-based courses, and school-leavers have been directed to take up professional training in fields where personnel are needed. In line with the policy of 'negritude', Dakar University specializes in local studies, and almost 50% of its teachers are Africans. Construction of a second university, near St Louis, began in 1975. The faculty of Law and Economics was due to open in 1984.

Tourism

There is a reserve for wild animals in the Nikolo-Koba National Park, a total of five National Parks and a bird sanctuary at Djoudi. Senegal also has fine beaches. The island of Goré, near Dakar, is of great historical interest. Revenue from tourism totalled 25,000m. francs CFA in 1983, when there was a total of 240,000 visitors. Around 40% of visitors come from France. Under the 1981–85 Plan, there was to be an expansion in hotel accommodation, including the development of the resort of Sali Portudal, and in 1983 plans were announced to build a 247-room Hilton hotel in Dakar. Senegal is a member of the Office Inter-Etats du Tourisme Africaine.

Public Holidays

1985: 1 May (Labour Day), 16 May (Ascension Day), 26 May (Whit Sunday), 20 June (Korité, end of Ramadan), 14 July (Day of Association), 15 August (Assumption), 27 August (Tabaski, Feast of Sacrifice), 1 November (All Saints' Day), 25 November (Mouloud, Birth of the Prophet), 25 December (Christmas).

1986: 1 January (New Year's Day), 1 February (Confederal Agreement Day), 28 March (Good Friday), 31 March (Easter Monday), 4 April (National Day).

Directory

The Constitution

The Constitution of the Republic of Senegal was promulgated on 7 March 1963. It was subsequently amended. The main provisions are summarized below:

PREAMBLE

Affirms the Rights of Man, liberty of the person and religious freedom. National sovereignty belongs to the people who exercise it through their representatives or by means of referenda. There is universal, equal and secret suffrage. French is the official language.

THE PRESIDENT

The President of the Republic is elected by direct universal suffrage for a five-year term and is eligible for re-election. He holds executive power and conducts national policy with the assistance of ministers chosen and nominated by himself. He is Commander of the Armed Forces and responsible for national defence. He may, after consultation with the President of the National Assembly and with the Supreme Court, submit any draft law to referendum. In circumstances where the security of the State is in grave and immediate danger, he can assume emergency powers and rule by decree. The President of the Republic can be impeached only on a charge of high treason or by a secret ballot of the National Assembly carrying a three-fifths majority.

THE NATIONAL ASSEMBLY

Legislative power is vested in the National Assembly which is elected by universal direct suffrage for a five-year term at the same time as the Presidential election. The Assembly discusses and votes legislation and submits it to the President of the Republic for promulgation. The President can direct the Assembly to give a second reading to the bill, in which case it may be made law only by a three-fifths majority. The President of the Republic can also call upon the Supreme Court to declare whether any draft law is constitutional and acceptable. Legislation may be initiated by either the President of the Republic or the National Assembly. Should the Presidency fall vacant, the President of the National Assembly is automatic successor to the Head of State.

AMENDMENTS

The President of the Republic and Deputies to the National Assembly may propose amendments to the Constitution. Draft amendments are adopted by a three-fifths majority vote of the National Assembly. Failing this, they are submitted to referendum.

JUDICIAL POWER

The President appoints the members of the Supreme Court of Justice, on the advice of the Superior Court of Magistrates, which determines the constitutionality of laws. A High Court of Justice, appointed by the National Assembly from among its members, is competent to impeach the President or members of the government.

LOCAL GOVERNMENT

Senegal is divided into 10 regions, each having a Governor and an elected Local Assembly.

POLITICAL PARTIES

There is no limit to the number of political parties.

SEYCHELLES

Introductory Survey

Location, Climate, Language, Religion, Flag, Capital

The Republic of Seychelles comprises more than 100 islands, widely scattered over the western Indian Ocean. Apart from the Seychelles archipelago, the country contains several other island groups, the southernmost being about 210 km (130 miles) north of Madagascar. The climate is tropical, with small seasonal variations in temperature and rainfall. The average temperature in Victoria is nearly 27°C (80°F) and average annual rainfall 236 cm (93 in). In 1981 Creole, spoken by virtually all Seychellois, was made the official language, replacing English and French. Almost all of the inhabitants are Christians, of whom about 90% belong to the Roman Catholic Church. The national flag (proportions 2 by 1) has three horizontal stripes: a broad green band separated from a narrower red band by an undulating white band. The capital is Victoria (formerly Port Victoria), on the island of Mahé.

Recent History

Seychelles was uninhabited until annexed by France in the 18th century. It was ceded to the United Kingdom in 1814 and administered as a dependency of Mauritius until 1903, when it became a Crown Colony.

Several political parties were formed in the 1960s, of which the most important were the Seychelles Democratic Party (SDP), led by James Mancham, and the Seychelles People's United Party (SPUP), led by Albert René. In response to their demands, a new constitution was promulgated in 1967, establishing a Governing Council with a majority of elected members. This, however, received the backing of neither party and, following a constitutional conference in London in 1970, a ministerial system of government was introduced. At a general election in November 1970, the SDP won 10 seats in the Legislative Council, while the SPUP gained five, and Mancham was appointed Chief Minister.

The SPUP, supported by the Organization of African Unity (OAU), demanded immediate independence for Seychelles, while Mancham favoured integration of the colony within the United Kingdom. In the campaign for the April 1974 election, however, the parties were united on the independence issue. The results caused bitter controversy. The SDP, which polled 52% of the votes, won 13 seats in the Legislative Council, while the SPUP, with 48% of the votes, received only two. At another constitutional conference in London, in March 1975, it was agreed that Seychelles should have internal self-government from October, and the two parties formed a coalition under Prime Minister Mancham. An independence constitution was agreed in January 1976 and Seychelles became a sovereign republic, within the Commonwealth, on 29 June, under a coalition government with Mancham as President and René as Prime Minister. Under the independence agreement, the United Kingdom returned to Seychelles the islands of Aldabra, Farquhar and Desroches, detached in 1965 to form part of the British Indian Ocean Territory and subsequently leased to the USA. In 1982 the Aldabra group, which (including its lagoon) represents about one-third of Seychelles' total area, was designated by UNESCO as a world heritage site.

On 4–5 June 1977 some supporters of the SPUP, led by René, staged an armed coup while Mancham was in London for a Commonwealth conference. René was declared President, the National Assembly was dissolved and the constitution suspended, although it was reintroduced with major modifications in July. René assumed power to rule by decree. In May 1978 the SPUP was renamed the Seychelles People's Progressive Front (SPPF). A new constitution, proclaimed in March 1979, established a one-party state. In June elections for a new National Assembly were held, contested only by members of the SPPF. René was the sole candidate in the concurrent presidential election. New elections for the National Assembly were held in August 1983, and these were again open only to SPPF members. Presidential elections were held in June 1984. René, the sole candidate, won 92.6% of the vote and was therefore elected for a second five-year term of office. Following the election, Dr Maxime Ferrari, the Minister of Planning and External Relations, asked to leave the Government, and his portfolio was assumed by President René.

There have been several attempts to overthrow René's socialist Government, using foreign-backed mercenaries. Tanzania has provided defence support since the second of these coup attempts in November 1979. The most serious assault took place in November 1981, when 44 mercenaries, mainly South Africans, flew to join rebels already on the islands. When the plot was thwarted, most of the mercenaries escaped by hijacking an Air India plane back to South Africa, where several of the mercenaries were later tried and imprisoned. In August 1982 there was a brief, unsuccessful mutiny by a small group of Seychellois soldiers, in which nine people died, but this was later stated to have been directed against certain army officers and not President René. However, in October 1982 and November 1983 two further coup plots were discovered. Both were believed to have been organized by the same Seychellois exiles who planned the 1981 attempt, and the plot discovered in October 1982 was again alleged to involve foreign mercenaries.

Seychelles follows a policy of non-alignment in international affairs, and supports movements for the creation of a peace zone in the Indian Ocean area. Until recently, all naval warships wishing to dock at Seychelles had to provide a guarantee that they were not carrying nuclear weapons. The United Kingdom and US Governments refused to agree to this condition, and their respective naval fleets were therefore effectively banned from using Seychelles port facilities. However, this requirement was lifted in September 1983, although Seychelles still theoretically refuses entry to ships carrying nuclear weapons. The Indian Ocean Commission, comprising Seychelles, Madagascar and Mauritius, was established in January 1983 with the aim of promoting co-operation in the region.

Government

Under the 1979 constitution, Seychelles is a one-party state. Executive power is vested in the President, who is Head of State and Head of Government. The President is elected for a five-year term by direct popular vote. The President appoints and leads the Council of Ministers, and also appoints the holders of certain public offices and the judiciary. The legislature is the unicameral National Assembly, with 25 members: 23 directly elected for five years and two appointed by the President.

Defence

A Seychelles People's Liberation Army and a volunteer People's Militia, open to those aged between 16 and 60 years, were formed in 1977. A small naval force was formed in 1980. Of a total armed forces of about 1,200 in July 1984, the army numbered 1,000, the navy 100 and the air force 100. Tanzania provides military advisers and additional personnel, and there are also some 100 North Korean troops based on the islands. There are paramilitary forces numbering about 900. Estimated defence expenditure in 1982 was US $8.3m.

Economic Affairs

Since the early 1970s, the Seychelles economy, traditionally based on subsistence agriculture, has become increasingly dependent on tourism and the growth of related infrastructure and services. In 1975 tourism overtook agriculture as the major contributor to GDP. Tourism generally accounts for about 20%, and agriculture for about 10%, of GDP. The tourism sector employs about one-third of the working population and supplies around 90% of the country's foreign exchange earnings.

About one-half of the land area is cultivable, although tree crops, such as coconuts, limit the arable land area. Food imports constituted 20% of total imports in 1981, 18% in 1982, and around 16% in 1983. The most important cash crop is coconuts, the source of copra, which accounted for 43% of domestic export earnings in 1982, and about 45% in 1983. However, production of copra and of the second cash crop, cinnamon bark, has fallen since 1973. A new plant for distilling cinnamon leaves was opened in 1984, and it was hoped that this would enable Seychelles to begin marketing high-quality cinnamon essence in the near future. Small quantities of tea, sweet potatoes, cassava, yams, sugar cane and bananas are grown for local consumption, although the staple food, rice, is imported in bulk.

In an attempt to diversify the economy away from tourism, the fishing industry is being modernized and expanded. In December 1978 the Government unilaterally declared an economic zone extending for 200 nautical miles (370 km) around the islands to protect Seychelles' waters from unlicensed foreign fishing vessels. Studies on the zone's fisheries potential have been carried out by Norwegian and French companies, and in 1983 and 1984 the Government signed separate agreements allowing Spanish and EEC tuna-fishing vessels to operate in the economic zone, in return for licence fees and financial aid. Licence fees from fishing were expected to bring in at least US $4m. in 1984. A joint fishing company is to be established with Spain, and talks have also been held with France with a view to establishing a similar company. In 1984 a major port and fisheries development project was launched. New unloading and fish-processing facilities are to be constructed at Victoria port to handle the anticipated increase in catch. The total annual catch was about 5,200 metric tons in 1981 but is expected to rise to 14,000 tons when development is completed.

There are no mineral resources except guano. In 1977 the Government signed a petroleum exploration agreement, covering an offshore concession area of 16,000 sq km, with an oil consortium, which undertook seismic surveys during 1978 and 1979. Test drilling began in March 1980, and at the end of the year it was reported that some gas had been found. In March 1982 the agreement was extended to allow five additional offshore wells. A three-year survey of the economic zone, started in 1980, revealed the presence of nodules, containing deposits of various metals, on the sea-bed. Further surveys of the area, to be undertaken in collaboration with India, were being planned in 1983. The manufacturing sector, which includes boat-building, printing and furniture-making, is inhibited by the lack of natural resources and is largely organized on a family basis.

The economy grew rapidly, mainly because of the expansion of tourism, after the opening of the international airport in 1971. The number of visitors reached a peak of 78,900 in 1979, from only 1,622 in 1970, but had fallen to 47,280 by 1982 because of world recession, an increase in air fares, the ban on landings by South African Airways and uncertainties following the 1981 coup attempt and the army mutiny in 1982, in which a number of tourists were reportedly threatened. However, at the end of 1981 a campaign to revive tourism was launched, with a budget of US $1m. for 1982. By 1983 there was evidence of an improvement in the sector, as the number of visitors had risen to 55,867. In 1984 a long-term joint tourism promotion project was agreed with Kenya and is to be financed by the European Development Fund (EDF).

The ability to offset a growing visible trade deficit, which totalled US $79.2m. in 1982 and $69.2m. in 1983, depends, in part, on the country's continuing access to foreign capital, both aid and private investment. Foreign exchange receipts, however, suffered from the slump in tourism, and in November 1982 the Government increased certain import duties by 100% in a move to narrow the current deficit on the balance of payments. Following a 15% revaluation of the rupee in March 1981 and the imposition of strict price controls, inflation was reduced from a record 16.2% in May 1981 to only 0.4% in 1982. The World Bank approved a credit for infrastructural development of between US $6m. and $8m. in 1984, and French credits worth about $4.4m. were to be provided for various projects in 1984/85.

In June 1978 the Government announced a five-year development plan, subject to annual revision: in 1982 total investment for 1982–86 was set at SR2,320m., of which 19% was allocated to agriculture and fishing, 24% to infrastructural development, 21% to public utilities and 27% to social services and housing. A new five-year national development plan, launched in 1985, projected expenditure of US $380m. The Development Bank of Seychelles was formed in 1978, and in 1983 it was reported that, since its foundation, the Bank had invested some SR40m. in 985 ventures. Almost 40% of the loans had financed trade operations, 33% had been invested in tourism schemes, and 15% in fisheries development projects, with the remainder financing agricultural projects. The Seychelles National Investment Corporation was founded in 1979 as a holding company covering important sectors of the economy. In 1983 Seychelles agreed with Madagascar and Mauritius on the terms of a constitution for the Indian Ocean Commission (see p. 217), which aims to increase co-operation in the region, particularly in the field of trade.

Transport and Communications

Most investment in transport has been put into the islands of Mahé, Praslin and La Digue, which contain 98% of the population. These islands have 254 km of roads, mostly surfaced. A road improvement programme is under way, and a new road is to be built from Victoria to Mahé international airport. There are no railways. Mahé is well served by a number of international airlines, and the airport there has been expanded at a cost of SR25m., financed with aid from the African Development Bank (ADB). Airstrips were built on Farquhar and Desroches in 1978 and 1980 respectively, bringing the total number of airstrips in the islands to 10. Inter-island transport is mostly by sea but small aircraft also provide a regular service. International shipping services have declined since the airport was opened in 1971. A major port and fisheries development project was launched in 1984. The commercial port at Victoria is to be enlarged, and the fishing port is to have new unloading and processing facilities. The project is to cost around $28m. (with finance coming from a number of international agencies, including the World Bank and BADEA), and work was due to start in early 1985.

Social Welfare

In 1980 there were 17 clinics and five hospitals, and a new 250-bed general hospital was under construction; there were 20 doctors, five dentists and 100 other medical staff. Health services are free for all residents. There is government welfare provision for children and mothers in need, and for workers' insurance against injury or death. In 1979 an old-age pension scheme was introduced. Unemployment benefit is provided in exchange for manual work.

Education

In 1984 there were 14,293 children in 26 primary schools and 2,605 in three secondary schools. In 1979 free and compulsory primary education was introduced, and in 1980 the Government launched a programme of educational reform, based on the British comprehensive system. A voluntary National Youth Service, launched in February 1981, now caters for the secondary education of most children between 15 and 17 years of age. Nine years of compulsory free education are received in primary schools. In addition, there is a special education school with 77 pupils, 38 crèches with 3,110 children, a Polytechnic with 1,284 students, a Technical College and a Teacher Training College. A number of students study abroad, principally in the United Kingdom. In 1971 adult illiteracy averaged 42.2%.

Tourism

Seychelles is renowned for its excellent climate, its fine beaches and attractive scenery. There are more than 500 varieties of flora and many rare species of birds. The Government is determined that development of tourism shall not destroy the environment, and strict laws govern the building of hotels. In 1983 55,867 tourists visited Seychelles. There were 2,770 hotel beds in 1983. Most of the industry is concentrated on Mahé, Praslin and La Digue, although there are plans to develop tourism in some of the other islands. Receipts from tourism totalled SR289m. in 1981, and about SR201m. in 1982.

The Constitution

The independence Constitution, which came into effect on 29 June 1976, was suspended after the coup in June 1977 but reintroduced in July with important modifications. Provisions relating to the Prime Minister, the National Assembly and the Public Services Commission were removed. The President was empowered to rule by decree. During 1978 a constitutional council presented proposals for a new constitution, providing for the protection of fundamental human rights and for the establishment of a Council of Ministers, a National Assembly and an independent judiciary. The new Constitution was proclaimed on 26 March 1979.

Under the provisions of the Constitution, the President is elected by popular vote simultaneously with elections for the National Assembly. The President fulfils the functions of Head of State and Commander-in-Chief of the armed forces and may hold office for a maximum period of three consecutive five-year terms. All candidates standing for the National Assembly are required to be members of the SPPF, the sole permitted political organization, and elections are on a constituency basis. The Assembly consists of 23 elected members and two presidential appointees who represent the Inner and Outlying Islands. The Council of Ministers is appointed by the President and acts in an advisory capacity to him.

SIERRA LEONE

Introductory Survey

Location, Climate, Language, Religion, Flag, Capital

The Republic of Sierra Leone lies on the west coast of Africa, with Guinea to the north and east, and Liberia to the south. The climate is hot and humid, with an average annual temperature of 27°C (80°F). The rainy season lasts from May to October. English is the official language, while Krio (Creole), Mende, Limba and Temne are also widely spoken. The vast majority of the population follow animist beliefs, and there are Muslim and Christian minorities. The national flag (proportions 3 by 2) has three equal horizontal stripes, of green, white and blue. The capital is Freetown.

Recent History

Sierra Leone was formerly a British colony and protectorate. A new constitution, providing for universal adult suffrage, was introduced in 1951. Elections were won by the Sierra Leone People's Party (SLPP), led by Dr (later Sir) Milton Margai, who became Chief Minister in 1953 and Prime Minister in 1958. Sierra Leone achieved independence, as a constitutional monarchy within the Commonwealth, on 27 April 1961. The SLPP retained power at elections in May 1962. Sir Milton Margai died in April 1964 and was succeeded as Prime Minister by his half-brother, Dr (later Sir) Albert Margai, previously Minister of Finance.

Following disputed elections in March 1967, the army assumed control and set up a National Reformation Council. The Governor-General was forced to leave the country. A second army revolt in April 1968 led to the restoration of civilian government and the return to power of the Prime Minister elected in 1967, Dr Siaka Stevens, leader of the All-People's Congress (APC). In April 1971 a republican constitution was introduced and Dr Stevens became executive President.

The 1972 by-elections were not contested by the opposition SLPP, and SLPP candidates withdrew from the general election held in May 1973 after the nominations of 12 of their candidates were declared null and void. This left no official opposition in the House of Representatives. In 1976 President Stevens was unanimously re-elected for a second five-year term of office. Elections in May 1977 resulted in victory for the APC but were accompanied by violence and allegations of corruption and intimidation. The APC was encouraged by its large majority to renew its demands for a one-party state, and in July the Speaker ruled that the SLPP was not capable of undertaking the government of the country, and was thus not the official opposition party. A new constitution, providing for a one-party system, was promulgated in May 1978, approved in a national referendum and adopted by the House of Representatives in June. The APC thus became the only legal party. President Stevens was sworn in for a seven-year term on 14 June 1978. He subsequently released political detainees and gave Government posts to several former SLPP members.

The Government faced mounting opposition in 1981 over the 'Vouchergate' scandal, which involved government officials and several Cabinet ministers in the misappropriation of public funds, and in August a state of emergency was declared to curb a general strike against rising prices and food shortages. In December President Stevens temporarily assumed the additional post of Minister of Finance after a second financial scandal implicating senior civil servants.

Legislative elections took place in May 1982 amid outbreaks of heavy violence. Of the 85 elective seats in the House of Representatives, 13 remained vacant until June because of gross irregularities in the May poll (one result being annulled a second time).

In February 1983 relations between Sierra Leone and Liberia were adversely affected by an article in a Freetown newspaper which offended the Liberian Head of State. He retaliated by recalling the Liberian ambassador from Freetown and by moving 2,000 troops to the border, which was temporarily closed. In May a disputed election result provoked inter-tribal violence in the Pujehun district. Many people were forced to flee to neighbouring states, and it was reported that more than 4,000 refugees had arrived in Liberia alone. Disturbances continued throughout the year, and in November troops had to be sent to the area to quell violence. Rioting broke out in Freetown in January 1984, provoked by students from Fourah Bay College, who were protesting about food shortages and rising prices. Four people were killed in the riots, and the college was subsequently closed for two months.

A presidential election was due to take place in June 1985, and there was much speculation about whether President Stevens would stand for another seven-year term of office. Although Stevens was believed to be around 80 years of age, he had not designated a successor, which resulted in considerable political uncertainty about the future, particularly as the First Vice-President, Sorie Koroma (who, under the terms of the Constitution, would take over the presidency should Stevens be incapacitated) was himself in poor health and was expected to retire from politics.

Government

Legislative power is held by the unicameral House of Representatives, with 104 members: 85 elected for five years by universal adult suffrage, 12 Paramount Chiefs (one from each District) and seven members appointed by the President. Executive power is held by the President. Under the 1978 Constitution, the President, formerly elected by the House, is elected for a seven-year term by the National Delegates' Conference of the All-People's Congress, the only authorized political party. The President appoints and leads the Cabinet, including two Vice-Presidents but no Prime Minister. The country is divided into four regions: the Northern, Eastern and Southern Provinces, and the Western Area. These are administered through the Ministry of the Interior and divided into 147 Chiefdoms, each controlled by a Paramount Chief and a Council of Elders, known as the Tribal Authority.

Defence

In July 1984 the armed forces comprised an army of 3,000 men and a navy of 100. Paramilitary forces number about 800. Estimated defence expenditure in 1982 totalled US $22m.

Economic Affairs

Agriculture employs about two-thirds of the working population, mainly on smallholdings, and provides up to 30% of export earnings. Rice is the staple crop, but imports are still necessary in spite of government attempts to achieve self-sufficiency. Cocoa and coffee are the main export crops, and production of palm oil, groundnuts, sugar, fruit and vegetables is also being encouraged. There is much potential for developing fishing and forestry. Major fishing projects are under way, including the expansion of the fishing fleet and of port and storage facilities, and the Government aims to make the country self-sufficient in fish by 1986.

Minerals earn more than one-half of the country's foreign exchange, and mining contributes 15% of gross domestic product (GDP). Production of iron ore ceased in 1975 but was resumed in 1982, when the Marampa mines were reactivated, with an annual production target of 1m. tons. However, this target has proved impossible to attain, as the mines have often been closed, owing to strikes and shortages of equipment. Production of iron ore totalled only 64,000 tons in 1982/83, but rose to 147,000 tons in 1983/84. Diamonds usually account for more than one-half of export receipts, although production declined from 921,904 carats in 1971 to 176,143 carats in 1981, owing to smuggling and to the depletion of easily accessible alluvial deposits. However, stringent anti-smuggling laws have been introduced, resulting in a rise in diamond exports, by value, from US $17m. in 1983 to an estimated $38.6m. in 1984. The exploitation of bauxite (at Makanji) and rutile (titanium ore) is of growing importance. Annual exports of bauxite increased from 630,700 tons in 1982 to 758,200 tons in 1983, and to an estimated 1m. tons in 1984. Sierra Rutile started production in 1979, but was forced to cease temporarily in 1982 because of a drastic fall in world demand. Exports of rutile totalled 71,000 tons in 1983, rising to an estimated 91,000 tons in 1984.

Manufacturing is on a small scale, covering palm oil, furniture, weaving and agro-based industries. In 1973 Sierra Leone and Liberia concluded the Mano River Agreement (to which Guinea became party in 1980) to establish an economic union, and in 1981 the three countries became a single customs area.

Sierra Leone's economy has been badly affected by the rise in import prices for petroleum, machinery, manufactures and food since 1976. Consequently, the trade deficit and inflation rate have increased, and foreign exchange reserves are scarce. The average annual rate of inflation rose from 23.3% in 1981 to 31.1% in 1982, and to 69.7% in 1983, while the trade deficit rose from Le 132.4m. in 1981 to Le 231.5m. in 1982, but fell to Le 90.5m. in 1983. The leone was devalued in November 1978 by being linked to the IMF special drawing right and not to the pound sterling; this link was severed in December 1982, when a dual exchange system was introduced to conserve foreign exchange and to curb trading on the 'black market'. However, this two-tier exchange rate proved largely unsuccessful, and was abandoned in July 1983 in favour of a new fixed exchange rate. A further devaluation, of around 58%, was implemented in February 1985.

Between 1978 and 1980 GDP grew by between 3% and 4% annually but in 1980/81 growth was only about 1%. Export earnings fell drastically, owing to depressed world markets, and the current deficit on the balance of payments was over Le 200m. in 1982/83. An IMF-approved investment and stabilization programme for 1981–84 projected total expenditure of Le 560.8m. and stressed self-sufficiency in staple foods, the development of an efficient infrastructure and increased mineral production. The need was recognized for strict measures to combat declining production, growing fiscal and balance-of-payments deficits and increasing internal and external debts. Sierra Leone was involved in negotiations with the IMF throughout 1983, and agreement was finally reached in February 1984. Sierra Leone was to receive $51.9m. in SDRs. At the same time, the Government rescheduled $50m. of the $400m. outstanding foreign debt. Negotiations for a further IMF loan were under way in 1985.

Transport and Communications

The railway system is being reactivated. An 84-km line links Pepel port and the iron ore mines at Marampa. The road network is being considerably expanded. There were 7,395 km of roads in 1978, of which less than one-fifth was paved. A road linking Freetown to Monrovia, in Liberia, is under construction, as one of the Mano River Union development schemes. In 1983 Sierra Leone was granted an $8m. loan from the Arab Bank for Economic Development in Africa, to assist in financing its section of the Freetown-to-Monrovia highway. Inland waterways total 789 km, much of them navigable for only three months in the year. The chief ports are Freetown, Pepel and Bonthe. Internal air transport is well developed, while international air services are provided by Sierra Leone Airlines. There is an international airport at Lungi.

Social Welfare

In 1982 there were 50 hospitals, 50 health centres, 54 dispensaries and 23 maternal and child health centres. The Ministry of Social Welfare provides community development centres, youth clubs and maternity welfare centres. Missions and voluntary organizations play an important part. The People's Republic of China provides medical personnel.

Education

Sierra Leone has both private and government-owned schools but education is not compulsory, and facilities are insufficient to meet the country's educational needs. Primary education begins at five years of age and lasts for seven years. Secondary education, beginning at the age of 12, also lasts for up to seven years. In 1980 the total enrolment at primary schools was equivalent to 40% of children in the relevant age-group, while secondary enrolment was equivalent to 13%. In 1982 there were 1,182 primary schools, 165 secondary schools, four trade and technical institutes, six teacher training colleges and a university. Adult illiteracy is estimated at 85%. In 1983 the Government launched a new education programme, under which 500 classrooms were to be built to provide primary education for 22,500 children in remote areas, and a new teacher training college was to be established in Freetown.

Tourism

The Tourist Board was set up in 1962 to develop Sierra Leone's tourist potential, and several projects are under way. The main attractions are the beaches, the mountains, jungle and game reserves. In 1980 there were 46,000 foreign visitors, and tourist receipts were estimated at $10m.

Public Holidays

1985: 25 June* (Id ul Fitr, end of Ramadan), 1 September* (Id ul Adha, Feast of the Sacrifice), 1 December* (Mouloud, Birth of the Prophet), 25–26 December (Christmas and Boxing Day).

1986: 1 January (New Year's Day), 28–31 March (Easter), 19 April (Republican Anniversary).

Directory

The Constitution

A new Constitution for the Republic of Sierra Leone was approved by a national referendum on 5–12 June 1978. Its main provisions are as follows:

Sierra Leone is a sovereign Republic and recognizes a one-party form of government. The All-People's Congress (APC), established prior to the commencement of the Constitution, is deemed to be the one officially recognized party. The Constitution provides for an executive President, to be elected by members of the National Delegates' Conference of the APC, a First Vice-President, principal assistant of the President, and a Second Vice-President, both of whom shall be appointed by the President. The President may be elected for a period of seven years, and no one President may hold office for more than two consecutive terms. There shall be a 16-member Defence Council with the President as Chairman, to advise the President on all major matters of policy relating to defence and strategy, the role of the armed forces, and military budgeting and finance.

The House of Representatives, the supreme legislative authority, consists of a Speaker and Deputy Speaker, not fewer than 60 elected members of Parliament, whose nomination must be approved by the Central Committee of the Party, and not more than seven Presidentially-appointed members. Constitutional provisions are designed to safeguard certain fundamental democratic liberties concerning the House of Representatives, elections, appointments, the Supreme Court, the office of Paramount Chief and the independence of the judiciary. The President may at any time prorogue or dissolve Parliament.

Under the 1978 Constitution a referendum is required for approval of any fundamental constitutional change.

Previously existing laws may be applied with such modifications as will bring them into conformity with the 1978 Constitution.

In December 1981 a bill was passed allowing for primary elections to the House of Representatives, in which voters may choose between APC-approved candidates, and for which civil servants may stand.

Legislature

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

The House has 104 members: 85 directly elected for five years, 12 Paramount Chiefs and seven members appointed by the President.

Elections were held on 1 May 1982, voters choosing between APC-approved candidates selected in the primary elections. Voting in 13 constituencies was annulled, however, owing to serious procedural irregularities.

Speaker: William Niaka Stephen Conteh.

Political Organizations

All-People's Congress (APC): 39 Siaka Stevens St, Freetown; f. 1960; only officially-recognised party, holds all 104 seats in the House of Representatives; Leader and Sec.-Gen. Dr Siaka Probyn Stevens.

Several unofficial opposition groups exist, mostly based abroad. These include the Sierra Leone Alliance Movement (SLAM) and the Sierra Leone Democratic Party (SLDP).

Judicial System

The Chief Justice heads the structure of the Supreme, Appeal, High, Magistrate and Local Courts. The laws applicable in Sierra Leone are local statutes, statutes of general application in England on 1 January 1880, and Common Law and Equity. There is provision also for some cases to be tried by a judge alone.

The Supreme Court: The highest and final judicial tribunal. Apart from its appellate jurisdiction, the Court has supervisory jurisdiction over all other courts and over any adjudicating authority in Sierra Leone, and also original jurisdiction, to the exclusion of all other courts, in all matters relating to the interpretation or enforcement of any provision of the Constitution.

Chief Justice: Eben Livesey Luke.

Justices of the Supreme Court: C. A. Harding, Agnes Awunor-Renner, Beccles S. Davies.

The Court of Appeal: The Court of Appeal has jurisdiction to hear and determine appeals from decisions of the High Court in both criminal and civil matters, and also from certain statutory tribunals. Any appeal against its own decisions may be made to the Supreme Court.

Justices of Appeal: S. C. E. Warne, C. S. Davies, F. A. Short, M. E. A. Cole, S. T. Navo, S. M. F. Kutubu, M. S. Turay, E. C. Thompson-Davis.

High Court: The High Court has unlimited original jurisdiction in all criminal and civil matters. It also has appellate jurisdiction against decisions of Magistrates' Courts.

Judges: O. M. Golley, D. E. M. Williams, M. O. Taju-Deen, M. O. Adophy, O. H. Alghalli, Virginia A. Wright, W. A. O. Johnson, N. D. Alhadi, R. J. Bankole Thompson, M. E. T. Thompson, C. J. W. Atere-Roberts (acting).

Magistrates' Courts: In criminal cases the jurisdiction of the Magistrates' Courts is limited to summary cases and to preliminary investigations to determine whether a person charged with an offence should be committed for trial.

Local Courts have jurisdiction, according to native law and custom, in all matters between natives which are outside the jurisdiction of other courts.

SINGAPORE

Introductory Survey

Location, Climate, Language, Religion, Flag, Capital

The Republic of Singapore lies in South-East Asia. The country comprises one main island and several offshore islands, situated approximately 124 km (77 miles) north of the Equator, off the southernmost tip of the Malay Peninsula, to which it is linked by a causeway. The climate is equatorial, with a uniformly high daily and annual temperature varying between 24°C and 27°C (75°F–80°F). Relative humidity is high, and the average annual rainfall is 244 cm (96 in). There are no well-defined wet and dry seasons. There are four official languages—Malay (the national language), Chinese (Mandarin), Tamil and English. The language of administration is English. The principal religions are Daoism, Buddhism, Islam, Christianity and Hinduism. The national flag (proportions 3 by 2) has two equal horizontal stripes, of red and white, with a white crescent moon and five white stars in the upper hoist. The capital is Singapore City.

Recent History

In 1826 the East India Company formed the Straits Settlements by the union of Singapore and the dependencies of Penang and Malacca on the Malay Peninsula. They came under British rule in 1867 as a Crown Colony. Singapore was occupied by Japan for three years during the Second World War. At the end of the war, following Japan's defeat, Singapore was governed by a British Military Administration. When civil rule was restored in 1946, Singapore was detached from the other Straits Settlements and became a separate Crown Colony. A new constitution, adopted in February 1955, introduced some measure of self-government, and in June 1959 the state achieved complete internal self-government, with Lee Kuan Yew as Prime Minister. The Federation of Malaysia came into being in September 1963, with Singapore as a constituent state. On 9 August 1965 Singapore was separated from Malaysia and became a fully independent country. In October 1965 the new state joined the Commonwealth, and in December it became a republic, with a President as constitutional Head of State. In May 1973 the last major ties with Malaysia, concerning currency and finance, were broken. In September 1972 Lee Kuan Yew's ruling People's Action Party (PAP) won all the 65 parliamentary seats in the general election, also contested by five opposition parties. Singapore has achieved considerable political stability through the application of comprehensive legislation. The threat of communist subversion has been a major preoccupation.

After independence the Government supported a strong US military presence in South-East Asia. However, with the collapse of US influence in the area during 1974 and 1975, Singapore adopted a conciliatory attitude towards the People's Republic of China and its communist neighbours. The Government called for the removal of foreign bases from member-states of the Association of South-East Asian Nations (ASEAN), and advocated a policy of neutrality. In 1976 and 1977 Singapore aimed to reduce tension in Indochina, and to consolidate its trade links with China, although diplomatic relations were not established until 1982. After the Vietnamese-backed take-over in Kampuchea in 1979, Singapore contributed to the UN decision to continue to recognize the Khmer Rouge government-in-exile, and in 1982, with the other members of ASEAN, Singapore supported the anti-Vietnamese tripartite coalition set up outside Kampuchea.

At the general election in December 1976, the PAP won all 69 seats in the enlarged Parliament, including 16 which were uncontested, and received 72% of the votes. The PAP won another sweeping victory at the general election in December 1980, when it gained all 75 parliamentary seats, including 37 unopposed. The PAP's 13-year monopoly of parliament ended in October 1981, however, when a candidate of the opposition Workers' Party won a by-election, resulting from the accession to the presidency of C.V. Devan Nair. This posed no direct threat but, among measures to reassert its authority, the Government increased its control over trade unions and restructured the ownership of major newspapers. In November 1982 the PAP approved amendments to the party constitution, redefining the PAP as a 'National Movement', and in October 1984, at the party conference, 11 of the 12 seats on the main policy-making body, the Central Executive Committee, were won by younger members, expected to appeal to the new young generation of Singaporean voters. In August 1984 Lee Kuan Yew announced his intention to step down as Prime Minister in 1988, when he would reach 65 years of age. In the same month he proposed constitutional changes to the office of President (at present a largely ceremonial post), suggesting an upgrading of the position by making it subject to election by popular vote (rather than by Parliament) and by granting to the presidency power to protect the country's foreign reserves by vetoing a future government's possible excessive spending. This move led to speculation that Lee himself intends to stand for President in 1988.

At the general election in December 1984 the PAP was again returned to power with a large majority in Parliament, but the party lost two of the 79 seats to opposition parties, and saw its share of the total votes reduced to 62.9% from 75% in 1980. Under a constitutional amendment that was approved in July 1984, allowing for the provision of up to three 'non-constituency' parliamentary seats for the opposition (with restricted voting rights) if none were won in the election, one extra seat was offered to the losing opposition candidate with the highest percentage of votes. This seat was refused, however, in January 1985 by the Workers' Party. In the new Cabinet, Goh Chok Tong, the Minister of Defence , was appointed to the additional post of First Deputy Prime Minister and emerged as Lee's likely successor. President Devan Nair resigned in March.

Government

Legislative power is vested in the unicameral Parliament, with 79 members who are elected by universal adult suffrage for five years (subject to dissolution) in single-member constituencies. The President is elected by Parliament for a four-year term as a constitutional Head of State. Effective executive authority rests with the Cabinet, led by the Prime Minister, which is appointed by the President and responsible to Parliament.

Defence

In July 1984 the Singapore armed forces had an estimated 55,500 troops: 45,000 in the army, 4,500 in the navy and 6,000 in the air force. Military service is compulsory for 30 months (24 months for officers). Paramilitary forces numbered 37,500. Defence expenditure for 1984/85 was S $2,260m.

Economic Affairs

Singapore has limited natural resources and relies on imports for most of its basic requirements. Its success in economic growth is based on entrepôt trade (chiefly in crude rubber, timber and pepper) and petroleum products, which account for about 70% of total trade, and its strategically situated port, the third busiest in the world. Singapore is the world centre of the rubber and tin markets. The services sector, including transport, communications, finance, storage and tourism, is important in providing foreign exchange and in financing the trade deficit.

To diversify the economy, Singapore has developed the manufacturing sector. The principal industries are petroleum refining, shipbuilding and repairing, textiles, electronics and sawmilling. Manufacturing employed 27.8% of the working population in 1983, and contributed 22.3% of GDP (scheduled to reach 31% by 1990). In 1982 the manufacturing sector suffered badly from the world recession, and output declined by 5.6% in real terms (compared with an increase of 9.8% in 1981), but grew by 2.1% in 1983. The construction and financial and business sectors, however, are the most significant contributors to GDP growth, accounting for 20.3% and 34.1% of total growth, respectively, in 1983 and recording growth rates of 28.6% and 16.3%. The rate of unemployment fell to 2.6% of the labour force in 1982, but rose to 3.2% in 1983. The labour shortage, mainly in the industrial and construction sectors, makes it necessary to import foreign workers, principally from other ASEAN countries. It is intended to eliminate completely the need for foreign workers by 1992. In 1983 they accounted for about 10% of the labour force. In order to encourage employers away from low-skill, labour-intensive industries towards high technology and capital investment, the Government recommended average annual wage increases of 20% between 1979 and 1981, with an additional financial incentive for individual productivity. The rate of inflation averaged 8.2% in 1981 but dropped to 3.9% in 1982 and to only 1.1% in 1983, owing largely to domestic monetary policy. In 1984 it rose again, to nearly 3%.

Although Singapore has no petroleum reserves of its own, it has the third largest refining complex in the world, with a total capacity of 1.1m. barrels per day (b/d). Petroleum refining currently accounts for about 40% of manufacturing output. However, the world oil glut and the expansion of refining capacity in other countries, particularly Indonesia (a major supplier of crude petroleum) and Saudi Arabia, have made Singapore more vulnerable as a refining centre, and some cutbacks were made in 1984. Petroleum is the principal import, accounting for 31.3% of total imports in 1983 (compared with 34% in 1982), and petroleum products are the main export. Petroleum and petroleum products provided 27.7% of total export earnings in 1983, compared with 32.5% in 1982. The volume of crude petroleum processed in Singapore reached 263.8m. barrels in 1979, representing an annual increase of 6%, compared with 15% in 1978. A large petrochemicals complex began operations in early 1984.

Less than one-sixth of the land area is under cultivation, and the agricultural sector's contribution to GDP was only 1% in 1983. Agriculture, forestry and fishing employed just 1% of the working population in 1983. The main farming activities are pig and poultry farming, fruit and vegetable gardening and orchid cultivation.

Singapore enjoys one of the highest per caput incomes in Asia, standing at more than US $6,000 in 1983. Emerging from the world recession of 1974–75, with a recovery in manufacturing output and investment, Singapore recorded a steady increase in the real growth rate of GDP, achieving an annual average rate of 7.5% during the 1970s, and reaching 10.2% in 1980. The rate fell to 9.9% in 1981 and to 6.3% in 1982, but rose to 7.9% in 1983 and to 8.2% in 1984. The trade deficit widened in 1982 to a record S $15,772m., from S $13,957m. in 1981, owing to an increase of only 0.4% in the value of exports, while import costs rose by 3.4%. In 1983, however, the deficit narrowed to $13,349m., owing to a fall of 1.2% in the value of imports, while exports grew by 3.8%, leading to the lowest growth in foreign trade since 1975. Singapore's principal trading partners in 1983 were the USA, Malaysia, Japan, and Saudi Arabia. Singapore handles most of Peninsular Malaysia's external trade. The current deficit on the balance of payments fell from S $2,781.8m. in 1982 to S $2,019.9m. in 1983.

Singapore has a strong currency, backed 100% by gold and foreign assets. In July 1984 official foreign reserves stood at S $21,595m. The Government is promoting Singapore as an international banking centre. In 1978 certificates of deposits (CDs), denominated in US dollars, were introduced to attract more international funds to Singapore. The Singapore Gold Exchange, launched in 1978, was renamed the Singapore International Monetary Exchange (SIMEX) in 1983 and opened a market for trading in currency 'futures' in 1984.

Transport and Communications

Singapore is the world's third busiest port, and is used by more than 300 major shipping lines. In 1983 there were 2,552 km of roads. There is a railway link with the Malaysian railways system. Construction of a light rapid transit rail system began in 1984. The international airport at Changi has been operational since 1981.

Social Welfare

The Social Welfare Department, aided by local voluntary bodies which are co-ordinated by the Singapore Council of Social Service, provides a wide range of welfare services to individuals and families in need. Singapore has no state social insurance systems but there is a Central Provident Fund into which contributions must be paid by employers and employees. In April 1980 Singapore had 13 government hospitals, with a total of 8,485 beds, and 1,826 physicians. There were also eight private hospitals, with a total of 1,261 beds.

Education

Primary and secondary education is available in the four official languages of Malay, Chinese, Tamil and English. In 1978, as part of a policy of bilingualism, examinations in English and Mandarin Chinese became compulsory for pupils wishing to enter secondary education. In 1983 the Government announced that, from 1987, English would become the medium of instruction in all schools. The New Education System (primary and secondary levels) allows less able pupils to complete their education over a longer period of time, if they choose. In May 1984 there were 460 schools, with a total enrolment of 473,773 pupils. Outside the school system there are several higher education centres and vocational institutes, providing craft and industrial training, and technical institutes providing advanced craft training. There is a technical college, a polytechnic and a teacher training college. The two universities were amalgamated in 1980 to form the National University of Singapore. Total enrolment in institutions of higher education was 30,991 in 1983. Adult education courses are conducted by a statutory board. Education is not compulsory but, among persons aged 10 years and over, 80% received some form of education in 1977.

Tourism

Singapore's tourist attractions include the blend of cultures and the excellent shopping facilities. Between 1977 and 1981 tourism expanded by more than 75%, but the number of tourists fell in 1983 for the first time in 20 years. In 1983 the 2,853,600 visitors spent an estimated S $2,303m.

Public Holidays

1985: 1 May (Labour Day), 3 June (Vesak Day), 20 June (Hari Raya Puasa), 9 August (National Day), 26 August (Hari Raya Haji), 11 November (Deepavali), 25 December (Christmas Day).

1986: 1 January (New Year's Day), February* (Chinese New Year), 28 March (Good Friday).

* From the first to the third day of the first moon of the lunar calendar.

Weights and Measures

Conversion to the metric system was due to be completed during 1980. The following are local units:

Weight: 1 tahil = 1⅓ oz (37.8 grams).
16 tahils = 1 kati = 1⅓ lb (604.8 grams).
100 katis = 1 picul = 133⅓ lb (60.48 kg).
40 piculs = 1 koyan = 5,333⅓ lb (2,419.2 kg).

Capacity: 1 chupak = 1 quart (1.1365 litres).

Currency and Exchange Rates

100 cents = 1 Singapore dollar (S $).

Exchange rates (31 December 1984):
£1 sterling = S $2.525;
US $1 = S $2.1785.

Directory

The Constitution

A new Constitution came into force on 3 June 1959, with the establishment of the self-governing State of Singapore. This was subsequently amended as a consequence of Singapore's affiliation to Malaysia (September 1963 to August 1965) and as a result of its adoption of republican status on 22 December 1965. The main provisions of the Constitution are summarized below:

HEAD OF STATE

The Head of State is the President, elected by Parliament for a four-year term. He normally acts on the advice of the Cabinet.

THE CABINET

THE LEGISLATURE

The Legislature consists of a Parliament of 79 members, presided over by a Speaker who may be elected from the members of Parliament themselves or appointed by Parliament although he may not be a member of Parliament. Members of Parliament are elected by universal adult suffrage for five years (subject to dissolution) in single-member constituencies.

A 21-member Presidential Council, chaired by the Chief Justice, examines material of racial or religious significance, including legislation, to see whether it differentiates between racial or religious communities or contains provisions inconsistent with the fundamental liberties of Singapore citizens.

CITIZENSHIP

Under the constitution, Singapore citizenship may be acquired either by birth, descent or registration. Persons born when Singapore was a constituent State of Malaysia could also acquire Singapore citizenship by enrolment or naturalization under the constitution of Malaysia.

Judicial System

A Supreme Court, consisting of the High Court, the Court of Appeal and the Court of Criminal Appeal, was established by the Supreme Court of Judicature Act. The High Court exercises original criminal and civil jurisdiction and hears appeals from the Subordinate Courts. An appeal from the High Court lies to the Court of Criminal Appeal or the Court of Appeal which exercise appellate jurisdiction. In certain cases, a further appeal lies from the decision of the Court of Criminal Appeal or Court of Appeal, as the case may be, to the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council in the United Kingdom.

The Subordinate Courts consist of Magistrates', Juvenile and District Courts which have limited civil and criminal jurisdiction and Coroners' Courts which conduct inquests.

BANKING

The Singapore monetary system is regulated by the Monetary Authority of Singapore (MAS) and the Ministry of Finance. The MAS performs all the functions of a central bank, except the issuing of currency, a function which is carried out by the Board of Commissioners of Currency. In May 1984 there were 124 commercial banks (13 local, 111 foreign) and 57 representative offices in Singapore. Thirty-seven banks were fully licensed, 14 had restricted licences and 73 foreign banks had offshore banking licences. There were also 51 merchant banks.

RAILWAYS

In 1984 there were 26 km of 1 m-gauge railway, linked with the Malaysian railway system and owned by the Malayan Railway Administration. The main line crosses the Johore causeway and terminates near Keppel Harbour. Branch lines link it with the industrial estate at Jurong.

Construction began in 1984 on the Mass Rapid Transit (MRT) system, to be completed by 1992 at a (1982) cost of S$5,000m. The network will consist of two lines, running east–west (32.6 km) and north–south (14.4 km). There is also a proposal to extend the system to the north-east of the island. Of the total proposed 70 km, the underground section will extend for 20 km, 10 km will be at street level and 40 km will be elevated.

SOLOMON ISLANDS

Introductory Survey

Location, Climate, Language, Religion, Flag, Capital

Solomon Islands is a scattered Melanesian archipelago in the south-western Pacific Ocean, east of Papua New Guinea. The country includes most of the Solomon Islands (those to the north-west being part of Papua New Guinea), Ontong Java Islands (Lord Howe Atoll), Rennell Island and the Santa Cruz Islands, about 500 km (300 miles) to the east. The climate is equatorial, with small seasonal variations, governed by the trade winds. In Honiara the average temperature is about 27°C (81°F) and the average annual rainfall about 2,160 mm (85 in). The official language is standard English, although pidgin English is more widely used and understood. More than 80 different local languages exist, and no vernacular is common to the whole country. More than 95% of the inhabitants profess Christianity, and most of the remainder follow traditional beliefs. The national flag (proportions 2 by 1) comprises two triangles, one of light blue (with its base at the hoist and its apex in the upper fly) and one of green (with its base in the fly and its apex in the lower hoist), separated by a narrow yellow diagonal stripe (from lower hoist to upper fly), with five white five-pointed stars (arranged to form a diagonal cross) in the upper hoist. The capital is Honiara, on the island of Guadalcanal.

Recent History

The northern Solomon Islands became a German protectorate in 1885 and the southern Solomons a British protectorate in 1893. Rennell Island and the Santa Cruz Islands were added to the British protectorate in 1898 and 1899. Germany ceded most of the northern Solomons and Ontong Java Islands to the United Kingdom between 1898 and 1900. The whole territory, known as the British Solomon Islands Protectorate, was placed under the jurisdiction of the Western Pacific High Commission (WPHC), with its headquarters in Fiji.

The Solomon Islands were invaded by Japan in 1942 but, after a fierce battle on Guadalcanal, most of the islands were recaptured by US forces in 1943. After the Second World War the protectorate's capital was moved from Tulagi Island to Honiara. In January 1953 the headquarters of the WPHC also moved to Honiara. Meanwhile, elected local councils were established on most of the islands, and by 1966 almost the whole territory was covered by such councils.

Under a new constitution, introduced in October 1960, a Legislative Council and an Executive Council were established for the protectorate's central administration. Initially, all members of both bodies were appointed, but from 1964 the Legislative Council included elected members, and the elective element was gradually increased. Another constitution, introduced in March 1970, established a single Governing Council of 17 elected members, three ex officio members and (until the end of 1971) up to six public service members. A new Governing Council of 24 directly elected members was formed in 1973, when a ministerial system was introduced.

A further new constitution, adopted in April 1974, instituted a single Legislative Assembly, containing 24 members who chose a Chief Minister with the right to appoint his own Council of Ministers. A new office of Governor of the Protectorate was also created, to assume almost all of the functions previously exercised in the territory by the High Commissioner for the Western Pacific. Solomon Mamaloni, leader of the newly founded People's Progress Party, was appointed the first Chief Minister in August 1974. The territory was officially renamed the Solomon Islands in June 1975, although it retained protectorate status.

In January 1976 the Solomon Islands received internal self-government, with the Chief Minister presiding over the Council of Ministers in place of the Governor. In June elections were held for an enlarged Legislative Assembly, and in July the Assembly elected one of its new members, Peter Kenilorea, to be Chief Minister. Solomon Islands (as it was restyled) became an independent state, within the Commonwealth, on 7 July 1978. The Legislative Assembly became the National Parliament and designated Kenilorea the first Prime Minister.

The main political issue confronting the new nation was the proposed decentralization of authority to the regions, support for which was particularly strong in the Western District, the most commercially developed part of the country. The first general election since independence was held in August 1980. Independents won more seats than any of the three parties. Parliament again elected Kenilorea Prime Minister by an overwhelming majority. In August 1981, however, Parliament approved a motion expressing 'no confidence' in Kenilorea, and chose Solomon Mamaloni to succeed him as Prime Minister. One of the first acts of the new Government was to create five ministerial posts with responsibility for provincial affairs. A major Cabinet reshuffle in February 1984 affected 12 of the 15 ministerial posts. In the same month, notice was given to foreign governments that no warship or military aircraft would be allowed to enter Solomon Islands' airspace or territorial waters, unless there had first been a written assurance that it was neither nuclear-powered nor carrying nuclear weapons. Relations with the USA became strained after the seizure and confiscation in June of a US fishing-boat which had been operating illegally in Solomon Islands' territorial waters.

After a scheduled general election to the National Parliament in October 1984, a majority among the minor parties and independent members was decisive in electing Sir Peter Kenilorea (as he had become) to the post of Prime Minister. The new Government consisted of a coalition of nine members of Kenilorea's Solomon Islands United Party, three from the newly formed Solomons Ano Sagufenua party and three independents. The five provincial ministries, established by Mamaloni, were abolished in line with Kenilorea's declared policy of restoring to central government control some of the powers held by the provincial governments. In February 1985 he ordered the release of the confiscated US fishing-boat, upon the payment of a fine of about US $770,000 by its owners.

Government

Under the 1978 Constitution, executive authority is vested in the British monarch, as Head of State, and is exercisable by the monarch's representative, the Governor-General, who is appointed on the advice of Parliament and acts on the advice of the Cabinet. Legislative power is vested in the unicameral National Parliament, with 38 members elected by universal adult suffrage for four years (subject to dissolution) in single-member constituencies. The Cabinet is composed of the Prime Minister, elected by Parliament, and other Ministers appointed by the Governor-General on the Prime Minister's recommendation. The Cabinet is responsible to Parliament. The country comprises four Districts, within which there are eight local government councils, elected by universal adult suffrage. The Constitution provides for further devolution of power to provincial authorities.

Economic Affairs

According to estimates by the World Bank, Solomon Islands' GNP per head (at average 1979–81 prices) was US $560 in 1980, rising to US $640 in 1981. The figure was US $660 (at average 1980–82 prices) in 1982. Between 1970 and 1980, it was estimated, the country's GNP per head increased, in real terms, at an average rate of 2.9% per year.

About 90% of the population depend on subsistence agriculture, the main crops being coconuts, sweet potatoes, taro, yams, cassava, garden vegetables and fruit. Fishing is also a traditional subsistence activity. The principal commercial agricultural product is copra, which was for many years the islands' main export. More than 60% of the country's copra production comes from smallholders, and the rest from plantations.

Since the 1960s the economy has been successfully diversified away from dependence on copra exports. In 1981 fish, particularly tuna, accounted for about 38% of total export earnings, while timber contributed almost 28%, copra 14% and palm oil and kernels a further 13%. Rice is also exported. Faced with an increasing trade deficit and poor prices for Solomon Islands' principal export commodities, the Government sought to encourage exports, and the production and consumption of import substitutes, by currency devaluations, of 6% in June 1981 and 10% in August 1982, and by selective duties on imports. However, GDP is estimated to have fallen by 2.3% in 1982, while the inflation rate was about 13%.

A heavily mineralized area at Betilonga and in the Sutakiki Valley, on Guadalcanal, has been investigated for gold, silver and copper, and there have been surveys of phosphate deposits, estimated at 10m. metric tons, on Bellona Island and of deposits of asbestos at Kumboro, on Choiseul, and high-grade bauxite on Rennell and Vaghena Islands.

Until independence, aid was mainly from the United Kingdom, Australia and New Zealand, although Solomon Islands also received multilateral aid from the Asian Development Bank, the European Development Fund, the UN and its agencies and the IMF, which increased after 1978. The British Government agreed to provide a £23m. post-independence financial settlement over four years, and gave SI $13m. in aid in 1982/83.

The islands' transport facilities are seriously inadequate, which hampers agricultural and economic development, but the Government is trying to minimize these problems by emphasizing decentralized rural development to prevent a population drift to the capital. In the 1975–79 Development Plan, the Government allocated almost one-half of public capital expenditure to economic infrastructure projects. These were mainly road construction, the expansion and modernization of the Government shipping fleet and the construction of wharves and telecommunications, as well as a hydroelectric scheme on the Lungga River on Guadalcanal. The 1980–84 Development Plan was also concentrated on rural development, improved infrastructure and education, and devolution of power to the provinces. In January 1984 tax concessions were granted to a number of companies, which were expected to invest a total of more than $A9m. in new businesses in Solomon Islands.

Transport and Communications

Despite progress in road construction, shipping still plays by far the most important part in Solomon Islands transport between and around the islands. The main ports are Honiara, Yandina and Gizo. Three airports are open to international traffic, while 20 other airports handle internal traffic. In July 1979 a new satellite earth station in Solomon Islands greatly improved telecommunications.

Social Welfare

The Ministry of Health and Medical Services is responsible for Government health projects. In 1978 it maintained eight hospitals, with a total of 676 beds, and 33 rural clinics. There were also two church hospitals, with 144 beds. A National Provident Fund was established in 1976 to provide social security benefits to all persons in paid employment.

Education

Education is not compulsory, but it is estimated that more than two-thirds of school-age children receive formal education, mainly in state schools. Primary education begins at seven years of age and lasts for six years. Secondary education, beginning at the age of 13, lasts for up to five years. In 1976 and 1977 eight 'New Secondary Schools', now renamed Provincial Secondary Schools, were opened to provide courses of a practical and local nature, mainly in agriculture and development studies. There is one teacher-training school and a technical institute. Scholarships are available for higher education at various universities overseas. In 1977 the Solomon Islands Centre of the University of the Pacific opened in Honiara.

Directory

The Constitution

A new constitution came into effect at independence on 7 July 1978.

The main provisions are that Solomon Islands is a constitutional monarchy with the British sovereign (represented locally by a Governor-General, who must be a Solomon Islands citizen) as Head of State, while legislative power is vested in the unicameral National Parliament composed of 38 members, elected by universal adult suffrage for four years (subject to dissolution), and executive authority is effectively held by the Cabinet, led by the Prime Minister. The Governor-General is appointed for up to five years, on the advice of Parliament, and acts in almost all matters on the advice of the Cabinet. The Prime Minister is elected by and from members of Parliament. Other Ministers are appointed by the Governor-General, on the Prime Minister's recommendation, from members of Parliament. The Cabinet is responsible to Parliament. Emphasis is laid on the devolution of power to proposed provincial governments, and traditional chiefs and leaders have a special role within these arrangements.

The constitution contains comprehensive guarantees of fundamental human rights and freedoms, and provides for the introduction of a 'leadership code' and the appointment of an Ombudsman and a Public Solicitor. It also provides for 'the establishment of the underlying law, based on the customary law and concepts of the Solomon Islands people'. Solomon Islands citizenship was automatically conferred on the indigenous people of the islands and on other residents with close ties with the islands upon independence. The acquisition of land is reserved for indigenous inhabitants or their descendants.

Legislature

NATIONAL PARLIAMENT

The 38-member National Parliament, established following independence in July 1978, replaced the former Legislative Assembly. At the most recent general election, on 24 October 1984, the Solomon Islands United Party (SIUPA) won 13 seats, the People's Alliance Party (PAP) 12 seats, the Solomons Ano Sagufenua party (SAS) 4 seats, the National Democratic Party (NADEPA) 1 seat, and independent candidates 7 seats; voting for the remaining seat was postponed.

Speaker: Maepeza Gina.
Leader of the Official Opposition: Solomon Mamaloni.

Political Organizations

Political parties are not very influential in Solomon Islands politics. The following parties represent the main groupings:

National Democratic Party (NADEPA): Honiara; f. 1976; Leader Bartholomew Ulufa'alu.
People's Alliance Party (PAP): POB 722, Honiara; f. 1979; a coalition of the People's Progressive Party and the Rural Alliance Party; Leader Solomon Mamaloni; Sec. E. Kingmele.
Solomons Ano Sagufenua (SAS): Honiara; f. 1984; Parl. Leader Sethuel Kelly.

Judicial System

The High Court is a Superior Court of Record with jurisdiction and powers as prescribed by the Solomon Islands Constitution or by any law for the time being in force in Solomon Islands. The Judges of the High Court are the Chief Justice, resident in Solomon Islands and employed by its government, and Puisne Judges, who are non-resident and visit the territory as and when necessary. Appeals from this Court go to the Court of Appeal of which the Chief Justice is President and other members are normally Judges from Australia, New Zealand and Papua New Guinea.

In addition there are Magistrates' Courts staffed by qualified and lay magistrates exercising limited jurisdiction in both civil and criminal matters. There are also Local Courts staffed by elders of the local communities which have jurisdiction in the areas of established native custom, petty crime and local government by-laws. In 1975 Customary Land Appeal Courts were established to hear land appeals from local courts, which have exclusive original jurisdiction over customary land.

Chief Justice of the High Court: Sir John White (acting).

Religion

More than 95% of the people are Christian, and the remainder follow traditional beliefs. According to the census of 1976, about 33% of the population adhered to the Church of Melanesia (Anglican), 19% were Roman Catholics, 17% belonged to the South Seas Evangelical Church, 11% to the United Church and 10% supported the Seventh-day Adventists.

CO-OPERATIVE SOCIETIES

In 1979 there were 238 primary co-operative societies working mostly outside the capital. There are two associations running and aiding co-operative societies in Solomon Islands: the Central Co-operative Association (CCA) and the Western General Co-operative Association (WGCA).

TRADE UNIONS

Solomon Islands National Union of Workers (SINU): Honiara; Pres. JOSES TUHANUKU.

Solomon Islands Public Employees' Union (SIPEU): Honiara; Pres. MOSLYN HABU.

ROADS

There are about 1,300 km of roads maintained by the central and provincial governments; in 1976, main roads covered 455 km. In addition, there are 800 km of privately maintained roads mainly for plantation use. Road construction and maintenance is difficult because of the nature of the country, and what roads there are serve as feeder roads to the main town of an island.

Honiara now has a main road running about 65 km each side of it along the north coast of Guadalcanal, and Malaita has a road 157 km long running north of Auki and around the northern end of the island to the Lau Lagoon, where canoe transport takes over; and one running south for 35 km to Masa.

On Makira a road has been built linking Kira Kira and Kakoranga, a distance of 35 km. Before it abandoned mining investigations in 1977, the Mitsui Mining and Smelting Company built 40 km of road on Rennell Island.

A study, due to be completed in March 1984 and backed by the Asian Development Bank, was to consider the laying or upgrading of 150 km of roads on Guadalcanal with the object of improving the infrastructure serving the main areas of agricultural production.

SHIPPING

Regular shipping services (mainly cargo) exist between Solomon Islands and Australia, New Zealand, Papua New Guinea, Hong Kong, Japan, Singapore and European ports. In 1981 internal shipping was provided by 34 ships of the government marine fleet and about 106 commercial vessels. The three main ports are at Honiara, Yandina and Gizo but a new deep-sea harbour is being planned for Noro on New Georgia to replace the port at Gizo. The ports are controlled by the Solomon Islands Ports Authority.

Solomon Islands Ports Authority: POB 307, Honiara; tel. 22646; telex 66348; f. 1956; Chair. D. KAUSIMAE; Gen. Man. JAMES VAUKEI; Sec. N. J. CONSTANTINE; Chief of Port Operations JOHN KWAEOTA; Harbourmaster Capt. JOHN KWALEMANU.

Tradco Shipping Ltd: POB 114, Honiara; tel. 22588; telex 66313; f. 1984; shipping agents, agents for Lloyds.

Shipping companies operating freight services to Solomon Islands include Sofrana-Unilines, Kyowa Line, PNG Shipping Corporation, Chief Container Service, China Navigation Service, Columbus Line, the Bank Line and Polskie Linie Oceaniczne. P&O and Sitmar Cruises are amongst the companies which operate passenger services to the islands. Solomon Islands withdrew from the Pacific Forum Line in 1983.

CIVIL AVIATION

Three airports are open to international traffic and a further 20 serve internal flights.

Solomon Islands Airways Ltd (Solair): POB 23, Honiara; tel. 20031; telex 6631; f. 1968; internal scheduled and charter services to 24 airstrips, and scheduled services between Honiara and Kieta (Papua New Guinea) and Espiritu Santo and Port Vila (Vanuatu); Gen. Man. R. P. C. BOBER; fleet of 1 Beechcraft Baron, 2 Britten-Norman Islander, 1 Beechcraft Queen-Air, 1 Metro II.

SOMALIA

Introductory Survey

Location, Climate, Language, Religion, Flag, Capital

The Somali Democratic Republic lies on the east coast of Africa, with Ethiopia to the north-west and Kenya to the west. There is a short frontier with Djibouti. Somalia has a long coastline on the Indian Ocean and the Gulf of Aden, forming the 'Horn of Africa'. The climate is generally hot and dry, with an average annual temperature of 27°C (80°F). It is hotter in the interior and on the Gulf of Aden, but cooler on the Indian Ocean coast. Average annual rainfall is less than 430 mm (17 in). The national language is Somali but Arabic is also in official use. English and Italian are also widely spoken. The state religion is Islam, and the majority of Somalis are Sunni Muslims. There is a small Christian community, mostly Roman Catholics. The national flag (proportions 3 by 2) is pale blue, with a large five-pointed white star in the centre. The capital is Mogadishu.

Recent History

Somalia was formed by a merger of two former colonial territories: British Somaliland, in the north, and its larger and more populous neighbour, Italian Somaliland. The United Kingdom established a protectorate in British Somaliland in 1886, following the withdrawal of Egyptian garrisons from the area. Italian Somaliland originated in 1889, when Italy concluded agreements with two local rulers, who placed their territories under Italian protection. Italy's occupation of the region was subsequently extended along the coast and inland, and Italian control was completed in 1927.

Italian forces in Somaliland and Eritrea invaded and occupied neighbouring Abyssinia (Ethiopia) in 1935–36. During the Second World War (1939–45) British Somaliland was temporarily conquered by Italian troops, but in 1941 it was recaptured by a British counter-offensive, which also forced the Italians to withdraw from Eritrea, Italian Somaliland and Ethiopia. A British military administration was then established in British and Italian Somaliland.

Under the provisions of the post-war peace treaty of February 1947, Italy renounced all rights to Italian Somaliland. In December 1950, however, the pre-war colony became the UN Trust Territory of Somalia, with Italy returning as the administering power for a transitional period, fixed at 10 years, prior to independence. During the 1950s the Italian administration expanded education and other social services. Under Italian supervision, the territory's first general election on the basis of universal adult suffrage was held in March 1959, when 83 of the 90 seats in the Legislative Assembly were won by the Somali Youth League (SYL), a pro-Western party, founded in 1943 and led by the Prime Minister, Seyyid Abdullah Issa. The SYL favoured the creation of a single state embracing all Somali-inhabited areas, including those in French Somaliland (now Djibouti), Ethiopia and Kenya.

Meanwhile, British Somaliland reverted to civilian rule in 1948. The British colonial authorities prepared the territory for self-government, and the first general election took place in March 1959. Fresh elections, for a new Legislative Council, were held in February 1960, with all parties in favour of early independence and the unification of all Somali territories. Representatives of British Somaliland and the Trust Territory of Somalia met in April and agreed on a merger of the two territories in an independent republic. British Somaliland was granted independence on 26 June 1960, and the merger scheme received unanimous approval by the legislature on the following day.

Accordingly, the union of former British and Italian Somaliland took effect on 1 July 1960, when the independent Somali Republic was proclaimed. On the same day, representatives of the two component territories elected Aden Abdullah Osman, hitherto President of the Somalia Legislative Assembly, to be the first President of the new Republic. The legislatures of the two Somali regions merged to form a single National Assembly. The two dominant parties in former British Somaliland joined with the SYL to form a tripartite coalition government. Dr Abdirashid Ali Shermarke of the SYL became Prime Minister, following Issa's resignation.

During the 1960s the SYL remained the dominant party and pursued Somali territorial claims to parts of Ethiopia and Kenya. Somalia became increasingly dependent on aid from the USSR and other communist states. The frontier dispute between the United Kingdom and Somalia over Kenya's Northern Frontier District resulted in the severing of diplomatic relations by Somalia in 1963. A further dispute over frontiers with Ethiopia led to fighting in 1964. Following a general election in March 1964, Dr Shermarke resigned as Prime Minister in June. He was replaced by Abdirazak Haji Hussein, formerly the Minister of Works, who formed a Cabinet exclusively from members of the SYL. In June 1967, however, Dr Shermarke was elected by the National Assembly to replace President Osman. He appointed a new Cabinet, led by Mohamed Haji Ibrahim Egal, the former Prime Minister of British Somaliland. Diplomatic relations with Kenya and the United Kingdom were resumed in 1968, although relations with Ethiopia deteriorated as a result of Somalia's claim to the Ogaden district and its support for the Western Somali Liberation Front (WSLF).

On 15 October 1969, while the Prime Minister was abroad, President Shermarke was assassinated by a policeman. Egal quickly returned to Somalia but, six days after the murder, the army seized control in a coup on the eve of a planned presidential election. Power was assumed by the Commander-in-Chief of the armed forces, Maj.-Gen. Mohamed Siad Barre. The 1960 constitution was suspended, political parties were abolished and the National Assembly dissolved. A new government was formed by a Supreme Revolutionary Council (SRC), chaired by Siad Barre, which proclaimed the Somali Democratic Republic. In October 1970 Siad Barre declared Somalia a socialist state and began a revolutionary programme of national unification and social and economic reform. In July 1976 the SRC dissolved itself, and power was transferred to the newly-formed Somali Revolutionary Socialist Party (SRSP). All members of the SRC became members of the ruling party's Central Committee.

Somalia's relations with its neighbours have, in the past, been soured by continued insistence on the 'right to self-determination' of all Somalis, particularly those inhabiting the Ogaden, in Ethiopia, and Kenya's North-Eastern Province. In July 1977 the WSLF, supported by Somalia, launched an offensive in the Ogaden which brought to an end the close military, political and economic links with the USSR which had existed since the 1969 revolution. In November 6,000 Soviet personnel were expelled from Somalia. In early 1978 Ethiopia launched two counter-offensives, with Soviet and Cuban assistance, and the Somalis were forced to withdraw in March. Relations with Ethiopia remain deadlocked, but there has been a rapprochement with Kenya, culminating in 1984 in a series of agreements on, among other issues, trade, communications and technical co-operation. President Moi of Kenya has offered to act as mediator between Somalia and Ethiopia, but Siad Barre has refused to consider any dialogue with Ethiopia while Ethiopian troops continue to occupy border areas of Somalia (see below).

The sporadic fighting in the Ogaden, which has continued since 1978, and prolonged drought, from 1978 to 1981, created a crippling refugee problem. However, after heavy rainfall in 1981 some refugees returned to their traditional grazing lands in Ethiopia. In 1984 there was a new influx of refugees from Ethiopia; UN agencies estimated the population accommodated in refugee camps alone to be about 600,000.

In October 1981 the Somali Salvation Front, some of whose members had staged an unsuccessful military coup in 1978, joined with two other opposition groups to form the Democratic Front for the Salvation of Somalia (DFSS). Together with another group, the Somali National Movement (SNM), and with substantial Ethiopian military support, DFSS guerrillas invaded the central border area of Somalia in July 1982. The invasion was contained by the Somali national forces but, despite military aid from the USA and from Italy, it was not possible to remove the rebel troops from the country. In May 1984, however, it was reported that some 200 DFSS fighters had surrendered, under the terms of a government amnesty. The USA has been slow to implement further military and technical aid, causing relations to become strained, and in 1984 Siad Barre called for a normalization of relations between Somalia and the USSR.

A new constitution came into force in September 1979. Elections were held in December for a new People's Assembly, which held its first session in January 1980, when Maj.-Gen. Siad Barre was elected President of the Republic. In October the President declared a state of emergency and reinstated the SRC, with extensive powers. By March 1982 the refugee position had improved sufficiently for the SRC to be dissolved. The accompanying government reshuffle was notable for the increasing influence of Siad Barre's Marehan clan at the expense of the northern Mijertyn and Isaaq clans, from which the DFSS and SNM draw their support. Arrests of prominent politicians in June further reduced the influence of the northern clans. During 1983 Siad Barre faced considerable opposition in the northern region, where a mutiny occurred in February and riots later in the year. Visits to the region, by the President in February and by a government delegation in June, did little to gain support for the regime. In November 1984 the hijacking of a Somali Airlines aircraft by dissidents focused international attention on unrest within the country. At the elections to the National Assembly, held in December, however, SRSP candidates received 99.9% of the votes.

Government

Government is by the Politburo of the SRSP, which is responsible for ministerial appointments. The President of the Republic, who is also the SRSP's Secretary-General, directs the Government with the assistance of an appointed Council of Ministers. The legislature is the People's Assembly, with 177 members: six nominated by the President and 171 directly elected for a five-year term.

Defence

Of total armed forces of 62,550 in July 1984, the army numbered 60,000 men, the navy 550 and the air force 2,000. In addition, there were 29,500 men in paramilitary forces and 20,000 members of the People's Militia. Compulsory military service of two years for all males aged between 18 and 40 years was introduced in January 1984. Estimated defence expenditure in 1983 was 2,602m. Somali shillings.

Economic Affairs

Since independence in 1960, Somalia's economic growth has failed to keep pace with the rise in the country's population, which has accelerated as a result of the influx of refugees. In 1982, according to estimates by the World Bank, Somalia's gross national product (GNP) per head, measured at average 1980–82 prices, was US $290. Between 1960 and 1982, it was estimated, GNP per head declined, in real terms, at an average rate of 0.1% per year. Between 1970 and 1980, however, it increased by 1.1% annually. The average real growth in overall gross domestic product was 1.0% per year in 1960–70, rising to 3.8% per year in 1970–82.

Somalia's economy is based mainly on the raising of livestock by nomads (who comprise about 60% of the country's inhabitants) and on subsistence agriculture, which together engage about 80% of the working population. In 1983 nearly 79% of the country's export earnings came from sales of live animals. The sector has been badly affected, however, by the embargo imposed in 1983 by Saudi Arabia (by far the major market) on livestock imports, pending vaccination and quarantine measures. In 1984 Somalia signed an agreement to export livestock to Egypt. Agricultural development is hampered by a shortage of skilled manpower. Of the 8m. ha of fertile soil in the area between the Juba and Shebelle rivers in the south, only about 1m. ha are cultivated. Agriculture consists of a large dry-farming sector, producing maize, sorghum and other food grains, and a smaller commercial sector, relying on irrigation for the cultivation of bananas, sugar cane and cotton. Bananas are the principal cash crop and the second most important export commodity. Favourable weather conditions in 1981 resulted in a 50% increase in production of maize and sorghum over 1980, and in 1982, despite a small decline, production was still the second highest on record. However, drought conditions in the second half of 1983 adversely affected agricultural production; all crops except sorghum, sesame and beans registered declines for the year, the worst hit crop being rice, which fell from 20,000 metric tons in 1982 to only 2,800 tons. Delayed rains in 1984 threatened an even worse result than the failures of 1983. The planned Badera dam, due for completion in 1989, would add 250,000 ha of irrigated land to the 1981 total of 150,000 ha. Fishing is to be encouraged in the northern coastal areas through the 1982–86 Development Plan.

Mineral resources, so far mostly unexploited, include salt, tin, zinc, copper, manganese, uranium and iron ore. In late 1984 work began on developing Somalia's uranium reserves, while petroleum prospecting has revealed potentially valuable deposits. The small agro-based industrial sector is formed principally by state-owned food-processing plants. The Government is, however, encouraging the growth of small-scale industries, and is keen to attract foreign private investment into agriculture, fishing, livestock and food-processing. A first cement plant was nearing completion in 1982, and a second, planned with Italian assistance, near Badera, would make Somalia self-sufficient in cement. The country's first pharmaceutical factory, built mainly with Italian aid, opened in 1984. A petroleum refinery which began operations in 1979 had to close in late 1980 when its source of crude oil was cut off by the Iran–Iraq war, but supplies were obtained from Saudi Arabia during 1982, enabling the refinery to start up again. Petroleum accounted for 31% of total import expenditure in 1983. Industrial production remained stagnant in 1983, owing to continued shortages of raw materials and spare parts.

After the 1973–75 drought had decimated the country's livestock, plans were made to diversify and stabilize the economy. The 1974–78 and 1979–81 Development Plans concentrated primarily on agriculture (especially crop farming), transport, communications and industry. A target of 4% annual growth was announced in the 1982–86 Development Plan, which had projected spending of 16,000m. Somali shillings. However, this, like previous Plans, was unlikely to realize its objectives, owing to heavy reliance on external financing, and the continuing problems of drought, the Ogaden conflict with Ethiopia, refugees, inflation and the cost of petroleum imports.

The Somali shilling was devalued by 48% in September 1984, and again by 29% in January 1985, and it was also announced that imports were to be restricted, and exporters given extra incentives. These measures were linked to negotiations with the IMF for new financing, agreed in February, following a successful conference of the principal Western aid donors. The economy receives about US $400m. each year in foreign aid. There was a considerable deterioration in the balance of payments in 1983. Exports fell by around 23%, owing mainly to the decline in livestock exports, while imports rose by around 13%. The trade deficit consequently increased from 3,988.1m. Somali shillings in 1982 to 5,147.6m. in 1983. The prospects for 1984 did not look promising, as the drought conditions continued and export performance remained stagnant. The annual inflation rate rose from 22.6% in 1982 to 36.4% in 1983, and to an estimated 92% in 1984. Somalia's external debt rose from US $754m. at the end of 1981 to $836m. at the end of 1982, and debt servicing represented about 16% of export earnings.

Transport and Communications

There are no railways, and roads, though generally poor, provide the principal means of transport. An extensive road development programme, which aimed to double the all-weather road network, was part of the 1979–81 Development Plan. The highway between Belet-Uen and Burao, completed in 1978, was the second largest Chinese aid project in Africa, costing an estimated 75m. Somali shillings. Nomads rely on pack transport. The ports of Mogadishu and Kismayu are connected by regular services with other East African ports and with Italy. Expansion of the port of Mogadishu, financed by the IDA and the EEC, was completed in 1977. There are nine airfields, including an international airport at Mogadishu.

Social Welfare

There is no state system of social insurance but plans are under way for improving social welfare facilities. Medical treatment is free at government hospitals and dispensaries. In 1978 Somalia had 5,232 hospital beds, and in 1980 there were 279 physicians working in the country.

Education

All private schools were nationalized in 1972, and education is now free. The illiteracy rate, which was 90% before the introduction of the Somali script in 1972, fell below 40% following the 1974/75 literacy campaign, and in 1978 was estimated at about 25%. There were 285,000 children at school in 1979, compared with just over 55,000 in 1969, and university enrolment rose from 337 to 3,605 between 1969 and 1978. Primary education, lasting for eight years, is officially compulsory for children aged six to 14 years. In 1980, however, the total enrolment at primary schools of children in this age-group was only 22% (boys 28%; girls 16%). Secondary education, beginning at the age of 14, lasts for four years but is not compulsory. In 1980 the total enrolment at secondary schools of children in the relevant age-group was 6% (boys 9%; girls 4%). Formal education is being geared to the technical and economic needs of the country, and there are plans to create comprehensive training centres for nomads in 10 regions. UNESCO is assisting in the development of a countrywide library service.

Tourism

Tourism in Somalia is largely undeveloped, although the national park near Kismayu is rich in wildlife.

Public Holidays

1985: 1 May (Labour Day), 20 June (Id ul Fitr, end of Ramadan), 26 June (Independence Day), 1 July (Foundation of the Republic), 27 August (Id ul Adha, Feast of the Sacrifice), 25 September (Ashoura), 21–22 October (anniversary of military coup in 1969), 25 November (Mouloud, Birth of the Prophet).

1986: 1 January (New Year's Day).

The Constitution

The Constitution was approved by referendum on 25 August 1979 and received presidential assent on 23 September 1979. In December 1984 amendments were adopted regarding the election and term of office of the President. The main provisions of the Constitution, as amended, are summarized below:

THE SOMALI STATE

The Somali Democratic Republic is a socialist state led by the working class. Islam is the state religion. All citizens, regardless of sex, creed, origin and language, have equal rights and duties before the law. The Republic upholds the principle of self-determination of peoples and, through peaceful and legal means, shall support the liberation of Somali territories under colonial occupation, and shall encourage the unity of the Somali people through their own free will. The Somali Revolutionary Socialist Party (SRSP) shall have supreme political and economic authority; no other political party or organization may be established.

THE PRESIDENT

The President shall be Head of State and Commander-in-Chief of the Armed Forces. Political leadership of Party and State are indivisible. The candidate for the Presidency shall be proposed by the Central Committee of the SRSP and shall be elected by direct universal suffrage. In the case of permanent incapacity or death of the President, a successor will be chosen by national referendum. The term of office shall be seven years. The President is empowered to appoint and dismiss ministers, chairs joint meetings of party and state institutions, may initiate referenda concerning decisions of national importance and may, after consultations with the National Defence Council, declare a state of emergency.

THE PEOPLE'S ASSEMBLY

This shall be a legislative body consisting of 171 deputies elected by the people through direct secret ballot and an additional six presidential nominees. The normal life of the Assembly is five years. The People's Assembly is empowered to relieve the President of office. A two-thirds majority of the Assembly may amend the Constitution. No amendments to the Constitution may affect the republican system of the country, the adoption of the principle of socialism, territorial unity or the fundamental rights and freedoms of the citizen.

SOUTH AFRICA

Introductory Survey

Location, Climate, Language, Religion, Flag, Capital

The Republic of South Africa occupies the southern extremity of the African mainland. It is bordered by Namibia (South West Africa) to the north-west, by Botswana and Zimbabwe to the north, by Mozambique to the north-east, and by Swaziland to the east. Lesotho is completely surrounded by South African territory. The climate is generally sub-tropical, but with considerable regional variations. Temperatures in Cape Town are usually between 7°C (45°F) and 26°C (79°F), with an annual average of about 17°C (63°F). The official languages are Afrikaans and English, while the principal African languages are Xhosa, Zulu and Sesotho. Most of the inhabitants profess Christianity. About 40% of the white population belong to the politically influential Dutch Reformed Church. About one-fifth of the African Christians belong to African Independent Churches, and others are Methodists and Anglicans. There are small minorities of Hindus (nearly all Asians) and Muslims (mainly Coloureds and Asians). The national flag (proportions 3 by 2) has three equal horizontal stripes, of orange, white and blue, and in the centre of the white stripe are small representations of three flags: the Union Flag of the United Kingdom (horizontal), the old Orange Free State flag (vertical), and the old Transvaal Vierkleur (horizontal). The administrative capital is Pretoria, the legislative capital is Cape Town and the judicial capital is Bloemfontein.

Recent History

On 31 May 1910 four British dependencies were merged to form the Union of South Africa, a dominion under the British Crown. Under the Statute of Westminster, passed by the British Parliament in December 1931 and accepted by South Africa in June 1934, the Union was recognized as an independent country. From the establishment of South Africa until 1984, national administration was the exclusive preserve of Europeans, who form less than one-fifth of the population. A programme of constitutional reform, proposed by the President's Council in 1982, eventually resulted in the drafting of a new Constitution Bill, which was finally approved by the House of Assembly in September 1983, and by an exclusively white referendum in November. The new Constitution, which came into effect in September 1984, provides for the inclusion of Coloureds and Indians in a three-chamber parliament. Africans, who comprise more than 70% of the population, remain excluded from participation in central government.

The National Party came to power in 1948 and has ruled South Africa ever since. Following a referendum among white voters in October 1960, South Africa became a republic, and left the Commonwealth, on 31 May 1961. The main architect of apartheid (in theory the separate but equal development of all racial groups, in practice leading to white, particularly Afrikaner, supremacy) was Dr Hendrik Verwoerd, Prime Minister from 1958 until his assassination in September 1966. His successor was B. J. Vorster, formerly Minister of Justice, who continued Verwoerd's basic policies. Apartheid has been internationally condemned, with the result that South Africa has been increasingly ostracized. This has led to its expulsion from many international bodies.

The South African Government has established 'homelands', comprising some 13% of all land in the country, for African ethnic groups as an integral part of the apartheid policy, and promised to make them independent by stages. The Transkei homeland was granted its independence in October 1976, Bophuthatswana in December 1977, Venda in September 1979 and Ciskei in December 1981. In 1984 a committee, comprising members of the South African Government and representatives of the KwaNdebele homeland, was to begin considering the homeland's prospective transition to independence. South Africa has been the only country to accord diplomatic recognition to the 'independent' homelands. In 1982 the South African Government, with the support of the Swaziland Government, attempted to transfer the KaNgwane homeland, and the Ingwavuma area of the KwaZulu homeland, to Swaziland. However, the transfer was declared illegal in the Supreme Court of South Africa, and in August 1984 South Africa announced that it would grant 'self-government' to KaNgwane, a measure which suggested that Pretoria had finally abandoned the transfer attempt.

The numerous discriminatory laws which regulate the lives of the Republic's African, Coloured and Asian populations, combined with stringent security legislation, have led to the detention, without trial, of many of the Government's opponents, the banning of African political organizations outside the homelands, a large prison population and the forced removal of hundreds of thousands of Africans in accordance with the provisions of the Group Areas Act and the homelands policy. In a report that was published in early 1984, it was estimated that about 3.5m. people had been forcibly resettled since 1960. The Government denied this, but conceded that some 1.9m. people had been relocated during this period, and in April confirmed plans to resettle the black population of the Cape Town area, comprising 250,000–300,000 people, to a new township, Khayelitsha, by the year 2000. In 1976 Vorster used the executive's virtually limitless powers, conferred by the Internal Security Act, to crush riots and strikes in African urban areas. Several hundred people died in confrontations with the police, and many more were detained without trial. Allegations of police brutality culminated in international indignation at the death in detention of a black community leader, Steve Biko, in September 1977.

The parliamentary majority of the National Party (NP) increased in each election between 1948 and 1970, and in the 1974 elections the Nationalists won convincingly. The opposition United Party (UP) was dissolved in June 1977 and replaced by the New Republic Party. Subsequent policy disagreements led to the creation of a second grouping, the Progressive Federal Party (PFP), which became the official opposition after the November 1977 general election, at which the parliamentary majority of the NP was considerably strengthened. In the April 1981 general election the NP lost several seats in the House of Assembly to the PFP, while the extreme right-wing Herstigte Nasionale Party (HNP) quintupled its vote.

In September 1978 Vorster resigned as Prime Minister and was succeeded by Pieter Botha, hitherto the Minister of Defence. In government reshuffles in November 1978 and August 1980, Botha promoted several liberal members of the Executive Council (Cabinet). These promotions were a set-back for the conservative wing of the NP. During 1979 black trade unions were legalized, and some of the restrictions of 'petty' apartheid were lifted, and in that year Vorster resigned from the largely honorary post of State President. In 1981, following the abolition of the Senate, a President's Council was formed to consider constitutional reform. Its recommendations to include Coloureds and Indians (but not blacks) in a three-chamber parliament, with a multiracial government (led by an executive President), brought to a head the differences between the verligte (liberal) and verkrampte (hard-line) wings of the NP. In March 1982 Dr Andries Treurnicht, leader of the verkrampte wing, and 15 other extreme right-wing MPs were expelled from the NP, and subsequently formed a new party, the Conservative Party of South Africa (CPSA). Dr Cornelius Mulder (a former Minister of Information who had been expelled from the NP in 1979) swiftly merged his Conservative Party with the CPSA, which had a total of 18 MPs by June.

The CPSA gained further support at four by-elections in May 1983, when Dr Treurnicht retained his seat with an increased personal majority. Although the NP won three of the four seats contested in the by-elections, Stephanus ('Fanie') Botha, then Minister of Manpower, retained his seat with a reduced majority, and in November, after allegations of financial irregularity were made against him, he resigned from both the Executive Council and the House of Assembly. A ministerial reshuffle was announced soon after his resignation, and was followed in February 1984 by a by-election in his constituency, which was won by the CPSA. In June the CPSA defeated the NP in one of two by-elections to the Transvaal Provincial Council, although the NP won the other by-election with an increased majority. In August the CPSA and the HNP concluded an electoral pact. As a result of this, it was expected that only one of the two parties would contest a constituency in future general elections and by-elections, in order to prevent a split in the extreme right-wing vote. The NP won three parliamentary by-elections in November, but the winning candidate's majority was reduced by the CPSA in two of the constituencies and by the HNP in the other.

Throughout 1983 and 1984, despite opposition from both the CPSA and the liberal PFP, the Prime Minister pursued his policy of constitutional reform. In January 1983 the Coloured Labour Party (LP) voted by an overwhelming majority to participate in the reform programme, although it condemned the programme's racialist basis. This decision caused divisions both within the LP and in the South African Black Alliance (SABA), which opposed the reforms. In February the LP's membership of the SABA was suspended, and the LP subsequently resigned from the Alliance in April. The Indian community was also divided in its response to the proposals, but in January 1983 the South African Indian Council (SAIC) agreed provisionally to the proposals, on condition that the Indian community approved them in a referendum. The SAIC's decision was opposed by the Transvaal Anti-SAIC Committee at its annual conference in January, and the Committee also resolved to revive the Transvaal Indian Congress (TIC) and to establish a United Democratic Front (UDF) to mobilize resistance on a national scale to Indian and Coloured participation in the constitutional reforms. The UDF was formally launched in August 1983, and by 1984 comprised between 560 and 600 affiliated organizations, including the TIC.

The reforms were submitted to the House of Assembly in May 1983. They were finally approved by the House in September, and by about 66% of voters in an all-white referendum in November. In the same month, the PFP decided to take part in the reformed system. The Prime Minister had previously agreed to test Coloured and Indian opinion on the reforms, but in January 1984 the LP voted to call for elections to the proposed Coloured parliamentary chamber without a preliminary referendum. In the same month, the SAIC voted in favour of holding a referendum to test Indian opinion on the reforms, but in February the Government announced that elections would be held for Indians and Coloureds in August 1984, without prior referendums. No referendum was held to test black opinion on the reform proposals, and the Prime Minister stated in 1983 that the reforms would not include a parliamentary chamber for black representation. In February 1983, however, a new seven-member committee of the Executive Council was appointed to evolve a policy for the country's estimated 9m. urban blacks. A new Black Authorities Act was later introduced, under which the black community councils were to be replaced by town councils along the lines of the white municipalities. The new councils theoretically offer the blacks greater powers in local government. The first elections to the councils were held in November and December 1983. Political groups which oppose the new constitution, such as the UDF, encouraged blacks to boycott the elections in protest against the constitutional reforms, and the turn-out for the elections averaged about 20% in most townships. In Soweto, the largest township, it was only 10.7%.

The final session of the all-white Parliament was permanently adjourned in July 1984, and elections to the Coloured chamber of the new Parliament, known as the House of Representatives, were held on 22 August. Both these and the elections to the Indian parliamentary chamber, the House of Delegates, were widely boycotted by the respective communities concerned. About 60% of the eligible Coloured population registered to vote in the elections to the House of Representatives but, of these, only about 29%–30% actually voted, representing effectively only some 18% of the Coloured population of voting age. The elections were contested by some 207 candidates, and the LP won 76 of the 80 directly-elected seats. In the elections to the House of Delegates, held on 28 August, approximately 83% of the Indian electorate registered to vote but, again, the actual turn-out was low: only about 20.3%, equivalent to some 16.6% of the total Indian population eligible to vote. Some 167 candidates contested the 40 directly-elected seats, with the National People's Party (NPP) winning 18 seats, and the Solidarity Party 17. The elections were marked by outbreaks of violence, and by boycotts of classes by thousands of Coloured and Indian pupils and students. On the eve of the Coloured elections, over 30 leading black, Coloured and Indian political activists were arrested, including virtually all the leaders of the UDF, and about 200 people were arrested on the two polling days.

In spite of the widespread boycott of the elections and the manifest discontent of large sectors of the black, Coloured and Indian populations with the new reforms, the new Constitution went into effect in September 1984. P. W. Botha, the Prime Minister, was unanimously elected to the post of State President by the electoral college (see Constitution), and was inaugurated on 14 September. The President's Council, the new Cabinet (formerly Executive Council), and the three Ministers' Councils (see Government) were also appointed in September. The Cabinet comprised only two non-white members, the Chairmen of the Indian and Coloured Ministers' Councils, neither of whom was given a portfolio. The new Parliament was formally opened on 18 September, and went into recess shortly afterwards, having elected several standing committees. The first working session of the new Parliament began in January 1985.

The progress of the constitutional reforms took place against a background of considerable, widespread and persistent unrest, principally among the black communities. In addition to the disturbances surrounding the elections, during 1984 there were recurrent boycotts of classes by black students in protest at the inferior quality of black education. Riots occurred in September, partly as a result of rent increases, and included attacks on black township councillors. By early October, more than 60 people had died as a result of the violence, and in that month a combined force of 7,000 police and troops from the South African Defence Force sealed off townships and conducted house-to-house searches, resulting in hundreds of arrests. During 1984 there was also an increasing militancy among black trade unions, and in September some 64,000 people took part in the first legal strike by black workers, organized by the National Union of Mineworkers. The one-day strike was accompanied by violence in the major mining areas, and a number of miners were killed by police. Further violence occurred during a two-day 'stay-away' from work in November, organized by black unions and civic groups. Following pressure from residents, a number of black township councillors resigned their offices.

The position of the urban black population continued to be examined by the special cabinet committee in 1984–85, and during that period the Government took a number of steps towards further reforms. Several of the existing apartheid laws were to be reviewed by parliamentary committees, and, in response to the school boycotts of 1984, a number of educational reforms were to be introduced in January 1985. The President stated that there would be an 'informal, non-statutory forum' in which blacks could discuss constitutional reforms with government representatives. However, this proposal was dismissed as unacceptable by the UDF. In February the Government announced that the forced removal of blacks would be suspended, pending an extensive review of the resettlement programme. None the less, unrest continued during the early months of 1985, resulting in numerous deaths.

Among other difficulties facing the Government was the continuing conflict in Namibia (South West Africa), with frequent clashes between guerrilla groups of the South West Africa People's Organisation (SWAPO) and South African troops stationed in the territory. The South African army has also made long-distance raids across Namibia's border with Angola. Both the UN and the OAU recognize SWAPO as the 'authentic representative of the Namibian people', and the International Court of Justice and the UN have declared South Africa's presence in Namibia illegal. After the prolonged attempts to reach a negotiated settlement on Namibia had apparently become deadlocked over South African and US insistence that Cuban troops must be withdrawn from Angola, and after the collapse of the semi-autonomous internal administration, South Africa resumed direct rule of Namibia in January 1983. In December 1982 South African troops raided Maseru, the capital of Lesotho, killing 42 people, in action against guerrillas of the banned African National Congress (ANC). In May and October 1983 South African forces made further raids on Maputo, in Mozambique, again aimed at destroying alleged bases of the ANC, and in December 1983 South Africa launched another invasion into Angola, allegedly aimed at preventing an incursion of SWAPO guerrillas into Namibia from supposed bases in Angola.

In 1984, despite the tension that was caused by these raids, relations between South Africa and both Angola and Mozambique improved. In February South Africa and Angola agreed on a cease-fire on the Angola–Namibia border, and set up a joint commission to monitor the withdrawal of South African troops from Angola. This agreement raised hopes that a settlement on Namibia might be reached in the near future, but talks on the independence issue, held in Lusaka, Zambia, in May, involving SWAPO, Dr van Niekerk (the territory's Administrator-General), and representatives of some of Namibia's internal political parties, ended inconclusively. During 1984 South Africa appeared to be seeking ways of reaching an internal settlement on Namibia's independence, outside the framework outlined by the UN, but neither these efforts nor further negotiations on the issue, with Angola and SWAPO, made much practical progress towards a settlement (see the chapter on Namibia, p. 2232). By early 1985, in spite of the agreement with Angola, South African troops remained within Angolan territory, allegedly because of continued SWAPO guerrilla activity in the area. South Africa's offer to withdraw completely from Namibia, providing one of the five members of the Western 'contact group' would take over the administration and defence of the territory (which the Republic is finding an increasing financial burden), met with an unfavourable response from the political leaders whom P. W. Botha visited during a tour of Europe in June 1984.

In March 1984 South Africa signed a mutual non-aggression pact with Mozambique, known as the Nkomati accord, in which each Government undertook to prevent opposition forces in its territory from launching attacks against the other. The pact effectively implied that South Africa would withdraw its covert support for the Mozambique National Resistance (MNR), while Mozambique would prevent the ANC from using its territory as a base for attacks on South Africa. However, while Mozambique effectively curbed ANC activity in its territory following the accord, MNR rebel attacks on Mozambique continued. South Africa insisted during 1984 that it was not supporting the rebels, and made unsuccessful attempts to secure a cease-fire between the Frelimo Government and the MNR. In March 1985 Mozambique and South Africa reaffirmed their commitment to the Nkomati accord, but MNR activity in Mozambique continued.

It has been alleged that South Africa supports subversive groups in most black-ruled southern African nations, and that the South African Government has been involved in several attempted coups in Seychelles. Attacks by ANC guerrillas on strategic buildings and installations, particularly power plants, in South Africa have increased in recent years, and Pretoria's attempts to secure non-aggression agreements with its neighbours appear to be partly aimed at reducing support for the ANC. Shortly after the signing of the Nkomati accord, Swaziland revealed that it had signed a similar security pact with South Africa in February 1982. Since that time, the ANC presence in Swaziland has been considerably reduced, and the Kingdom has developed increasingly close links with South Africa. During 1984 both Botswana and Lesotho claimed that their Governments had been subjected to increasing pressure from South Africa to sign non-aggression pacts.

In spite of the recent agreements with Angola and Mozambique, South Africa has become increasingly isolated politically, both in southern Africa and elsewhere, since Zimbabwe (formerly Rhodesia) underwent the transition to democratic government. Zimbabwe severed diplomatic relations with South Africa in September 1980, although economic links were to be retained. Suggestions for wider unity in the region, centred on South Africa, have been rejected by neighbouring states in favour of plans to reduce economic dependence on South Africa. In 1979 the Southern African Development Co-ordination Conference (SADCC, see p. 205) was established to work towards this aim.

Government

Until 1984, legislative power rested with the unicameral Parliament (the Senate having been abolished in 1980), which was made up exclusively of European (white) members who held office for five years, subject to dissolution. Parliament was composed of the State President and the House of Assembly, of which most of the members were directly elected by Europeans. Only Europeans were eligible to vote and to be elected or nominated. Representation of Namibia (South West Africa) in Parliament ceased in 1977.

Legislation providing for a new and reformed constitution was finally approved by the House of Assembly in September 1983. Under the new Constitution, which came into effect in September 1984, legislative power is vested in the State President and a multiracial, tricameral Parliament, consisting of the House of Assembly (for the representation of whites), the House of Representatives (representation of Coloureds), and the House of Delegates (representation of Indians). The duration of Parliament is five years. The President, who combines the powers of Head of State and Prime Minister, is elected by an electoral college, presided over by the Chief Justice and composed of 88 members of Parliament (50 from the House of Assembly, 25 from the House of Representatives, and 13 from the House of Delegates). The President's term of office lasts for the duration of the Parliament from which the electoral college that elected him was constituted. The House of Assembly comprises 178 members: 166 directly elected by the white electorate, four (one from each of the provinces) nominated by the President, and eight elected by the directly-elected members. The House of Representatives comprises 85 members, of whom 80 are directly elected by the Coloured electorate, two are nominated by the President, and three are elected by the directly-elected members. The House of Delegates is composed of 45 members, of whom 40 are directly elected by the Indian electorate, two are nominated by the President, and three are elected by the directly-elected members. Each House is solely responsible for the legislation affecting matters deemed by the President to be the 'own' affairs of its particular population group, although all legislation is subject to the final approval of the President. Legislation for general (or national) affairs, concerning all population groups, is subject to the approval of all three Houses and the President. Disagreement between the Houses on general affairs is settled by the President's Council (see Constitution).

Executive power is vested in the State President, acting on the advice of the Ministers' Council concerned in the case of 'own' affairs, and in consultation with the Cabinet (formerly Executive Council) in the case of general affairs. The Cabinet is composed of the President (who acts as Chairman), and an unlimited number of ministers appointed by the President. There are three Ministers' Councils, one for each population group represented in Parliament (see Constitution). Blacks remain excluded from participation in central government.

Elections to the House of Representatives and the House of Delegates were held on 22 and 28 August 1984. The House of Assembly, which had been elected in 1981, remained in office. It was originally due for re-election in 1986 (under the terms of the previous Constitution), but its term was extended until 1989 in order to run concurrently with the terms of the other two Houses. The State President was elected in September 1984.

Each of the four provinces has an Administrator, who is appointed by the State President for five years, and a unicameral Provincial Council, whose members are elected by whites for five years.

The 'independence' of the Transkei, Bophuthatswana, Venda and Ciskei 'homelands' is recognized only by South Africa. Legislative Assemblies have been created for the other six homelands.

Defence

In July 1984 the armed forces totalled 83,400: army 67,400, navy 6,000 and air force 10,000. Military training is compulsory for all male European citizens for a period of two years, and all men between 17 and 65 years of age were to be liable for conscription from 1982. A small proportion of the total armed forces is composed of Africans and Coloureds. In 1983 the Citizen Force reserve totalled 157,000, of whom the army had 130,000, the navy 2,000 and the air force 25,000. In 1984 the army had 53,300 conscripts, the navy 2,300 and the air force 1,000. Paramilitary forces numbered 90,000. A separate South West Africa Territory Force, under South African control and comprising 14,000 troops by 1984, was established in August 1980. Defence expenditure was estimated at R 3,100m. in 1983/84. The defence budget was R 3,755m. for 1984/85, and R 4,274m. for 1985/86.

Economic Affairs

Mining forms the basis of the modern South African economy. In 1979 it was estimated that the country held 81% of the world's reserves of chromium ore, 51% of gold, 78% of manganese, 75% of platinum and 49% of vanadium. Mining contributed 14.9% of South Africa's gross domestic product (GDP) in 1983. The value of mineral exports increased from R 11,570m. in 1981 to R 13,716m. in 1983, and this was expected to rise to R 16,700m., equivalent to over 70% of total export revenue, in 1984. It was estimated that in 1985 the value of total mineral exports could increase to about R 19,100m. Total earnings from minerals (including sales to the domestic market) were R 14,450m. in 1982, increasing to R 16,174m. in 1983, and expected to rise to R 19,589m. in 1984. South Africa is the world's leading producer of gold, which is the country's major mineral export and accounted for 12.9% of GDP in 1981. Between 1970 and 1981, South Africa's annual production of gold declined from over 1,000 metric tons to 656 tons, the lowest figure for 20 years. Output increased to about 680 tons in 1983, when earnings from gold exports were R 10,180m., equivalent to about 49% of total export earnings. Production was expected to increase to about 687 tons in 1984, when gold sales were projected to earn some R 11,500m., and output of gold was forecast to reach an estimated 703 tons in 1985, rising to about 720 tons per year by 1990. In April 1978 South Africa revalued its gold reserves in line with current market prices, raising the value of the Reserve Bank's holdings from R 287m. in 1977 to R 3,194m. in 1981. The price of gold reached a peak of US $850 per troy ounce in 1980, but fell to less than $300 per ounce in 1982, threatening the economic viability of several mines. The price recovered considerably during late 1982 and early 1983, but fell again during 1984, and was only $285 per ounce (its lowest level for more than five years) in February 1985. The international market for platinum has suffered a similar recession, but prices became slightly more buoyant during 1984, when it was projected that platinum exports could earn more than R 1,000m. After gold and platinum, iron ore is the most valuable metal export, earning an estimated R 275m. in 1980, and projected to earn about R 248m. in 1984. South Africa also produces considerable quantities of coal, exports of which earned R 1,240m. in 1983 and were forecast to earn R 1,600m. in 1984.

However, despite the importance of mining, manufacturing has been the principal sector of the economy for many years. Manufacturing provided 22.4% of GDP in 1983. The establishment of the South African Iron and Steel Industrial Corporation (ISCOR) and the South African Coal, Oil and Gas Corporation (SASOL) laid the foundations of the heavy engineering, chemical and petroleum industries. In 1979 Iran, from which South Africa had been importing 90% of its petroleum, ended supplies, leading to an intensified search for alternative fuel sources and drastic fuel-saving measures, including price increases of about 50%. South Africa's petroleum requirements are estimated at some 320,000 barrels per day (b/d). The Sasol 3 plant, designed to extract oil and gas products from coal, started production in 1983, and, together with the earlier Sasol 1 and 2 plants, is thought to provide more than 50% of South Africa's liquid fuel requirements. Exploration for petroleum deposits was started in 1965, and by 1984 some R 434m. had been spent on petroleum exploration. The first significant discovery was made during 1982, off the Cape coast, but even this was not of economic quantity. However, reserves of some 1,000,000m. standard cu ft of natural gas have been discovered in the offshore field of Mosselbaai, off the east coast, and in 1984 a R 2,000m. plan to convert the gas into liquid fuels was under consideration. It is thought that the reserves could be converted into fuel at the rate of 20,000 b/d over the next 20 years. Coal-based electricity has, so far, supplied most of South Africa's energy requirements, and this is to be supplemented by the country's first nuclear power station, at Koeberg. The plant began operating in March 1984, and the first of its two units was connected to the national grid in April, and reached full generating capacity in June. The second unit was expected to come into operation by mid-1985. The combined capacity of the two units, operating at their maximum potential, is 1,842 MW, and, when both units are in full operation, the plant will represent nearly 10% of South Africa's electricity generating capacity. In February 1985, however, the Koeberg plant was temporarily closed, following the discovery of defects.

Industrial development has been dependent on the white population for capital, management and higher technical skills, with the Africans, Coloureds and Asians providing most of the unskilled labour force. Statutory job reservation ensured that certain jobs were held only by Europeans. However, following the report of the Wiehahn Commission in 1979, some job reservation legislation was removed, but the 'homelands' policy and migrant workers' lack of rights continued to place severe restrictions on the black labour force. The discrepancy in wages between Europeans and Africans remains a source of discontent, and there were a number of strikes by black workers during 1984. Total European real earnings were seven times greater than African earnings in 1969, and remained five times greater in 1976.

Much livestock is reared in South Africa, and the country has valuable fruit, wine and fishing industries. Exports of wool, maize, sugar and karakul pelts are important, but severe drought between 1982 and 1984 resulted in a decline in the output of sugar and cereals, and also caused the death of many cattle. Agriculture, forestry and fishing contributed only 4.7% of GDP in 1983. Agricultural production declined by 7.5% in 1982, and by a further 15% in 1983. The output of maize, South Africa's main farm export, fell drastically from a record crop of 14m. metric tons in 1981 to 8.3m. tons in 1982, and was an estimated 3.9m. tons in 1983, the smallest maize crop for 10 years. Until 1982, South Africa had been the world's fifth largest maize exporter, but in 1983 all maize exports were cancelled, and about 2.4m. tons had to be imported. In that year, the drought was estimated to have cost R 1,500m. in lost exports and additional food imports. The situation did not improve during 1984, when the maize crop was about 4.1m. tons, and 4m. tons of maize were imported. However, the crop was expected to improve, to some 5.5m. tons, in 1985, following a slight amelioration in weather conditions.

The annual growth of GDP averaged about 3%, in real terms, during the 1970s, but rose to 7.8% in 1980, owing to increases in the value of exports and net gold output, and an expansionary budget policy. However, the growth rate declined to 4.9% in 1981, and GDP fell by 1.2% in 1982, after a sharp fall in gold prices and the onset of the drought. GDP declined by a further 3.2% in 1983. Growth, in real terms, was expected to be about 4% in 1984, but GDP was thought likely to decline during early 1985, and growth for that year was estimated at only 1%–2%.

The balance of payments has been affected by fluctuations in the gold price in recent years, and in 1981 the current deficit was about R 3,600m., compared with a surplus of R 2,800m. in 1980. Following the approval of an IMF loan of SDR 1,000m., and an improvement in the gold price towards the end of 1982, the deficit for that year fell to R 3,040m. The improvement also reflected a decline in the value of imports and an increase in the value of exports. A small current account surplus was registered in 1983. The inflation rate remained high during 1982 and 1983, although it fell from 14%–15% in early 1983 to about 11% by the end of the year. Inflation was 13.3% in the year to November 1984, and was about 14% by March 1985.

The overall decline in the growth rate of the economy, the rapid rise in the money supply, the persistently high rate of inflation, and continuing problems caused by the falling gold price and the drought have resulted in an increasingly conservative economic policy in recent years. Stricter monetary controls were introduced in the budgets of 1981/82 and 1982/83, and in August 1984 the new Finance Minister introduced austerity measures, designed to reduce imports and consumer spending.

to curb inflation, and to strengthen the rand. During the 1984–85 period the Government also increased tax rates and took steps to curb government expenditure, which has risen considerably in recent years. The 1985/86 budget aimed to prevent any further rise in government spending, and projected an increase in defence expenditure of only 8.1%, compared with a 21.4% increase in the 1984/85 budget. Total expenditure for 1985/86 was put at R 30,890m., compared with an estimated R 25,439m. in 1984/85.

The value of the rand has depreciated considerably since the mid-1970s, causing further economic decline. The Government ended the linking of the rand to the US dollar in 1979, after the rand had declined in value by 20% over the previous five years. The value of the rand is also affected by the varying gold price, and continued to decline during 1982–85, reaching a record low against the dollar in January 1985, partly as a result of the continuing strength of the dollar, and the adverse effect of this on the gold price. In that month the Government introduced a series of temporary measures in a bid to protect the rand from further decline. Purchases by the Government of gold from South Africa's mines were to be made in a mixture of currencies (one-half in dollars and one-half in rand), in order to control the flow of dollars, and curbs on commercial bank credit were also introduced.

To counteract recurrent threats of UN economic sanctions and the country's vulnerability to variable inflow of foreign investment capital, South Africa introduced strict controls on the outflow of foreign capital in 1960, which were reinforced in 1977. However, these controls were greatly relaxed in February 1983 in a measure to avert an increase in inflation as a result of the rising price of gold. The dual exchange rate for the rand was abolished, thereby effectively lifting foreign exchange controls for non-residents. This measure was followed in September by further changes in monetary policy, designed to develop a freer foreign-exchange market. The changes included the lifting of strict Reserve Bank controls on the rand, allowing it to 'float'.

Transport and Communications

Railways, ports, airways and harbours are administered by the state. There are no navigable rivers. Private bus services are regulated to complement the railways. The rail network is undergoing a major electrification programme, under which more than 4,000 km of track are to be electrified. Roads are good, and a national highway system is being built. There are many internal and international air services and considerable ocean shipping traffic. An 800-km railway line links Sishen, the site of a major iron mining project, with Saldanha Bay for the export of iron ore and associated products. A substantial extension has been made to the harbours at Richards Bay and Saldanha Bay, and to the rail link from Witbank to Richards Bay for the export of coal. In September 1983 South Africa signed an agreement with Swaziland, under which a new rail link will be constructed between Komatipoort (in the eastern Transvaal) and the Swaziland border. From the border, the link will then connect with the Swazi railway line.

Social Welfare

Social welfare services protect the old, the blind, the war disabled, the unemployed and those injured at work. Medical services are administered by the Provinces. These reach a high standard, although there is considerable disparity between health facilities available to whites and non-whites; in 1981 there was one hospital bed for every 61 whites, one for every 337 Africans and for every 505 Asians. In 1980 there were 15,663 medical practitioners, and 524 general hospitals with 101,126 beds.

Education

For Europeans, schooling is compulsory between the ages of seven and 16 in English-medium or Afrikaans-medium schools; for Coloureds, it is compulsory from seven to 16 in Natal and from seven to 14 in the Cape Province where possible; for Asians, attendance is compulsory where possible. In 1970 there were fewer than 10,000 African, Coloured and Asian graduates. Although in 1984 about 3.2m. Africans were at primary schools, about one-half of all pupils leave before their fifth year. In 1976 schooling was made compulsory for all Africans between the ages of seven and 11. Africans' education is in English and their own languages, and the curriculum is limited. There were 10 universities for whites, and eight universities for Africans, including one located in each of the four 'homelands', in 1984. Restrictions on admissions to 'white' universities have been relaxed, and they are now attended by significant numbers of African, Coloured and Indian students. There are also two further autonomous universities, one for Coloureds and one for Indians. The Government is committed to equality in education, and in 1983 and 1984 it put forward proposals for changes in the education system, aimed at providing 'separate but equal' education for the different race groups. A report on education in the Republic, compiled in 1984, estimated that 50% of the adult population were illiterate. The illiteracy rate was 7% among whites, 29% among Asians, 38% among Coloureds, and nearly 68% among blacks. The total education budget for 1985/86 was R 5,044m.

Tourism

Tourism is an important industry, and there were 708,710 visitors to South Africa in 1981. In 1981/82 South Africa earned an estimated $630m. in foreign exchange from tourism. South Africa's attractions are the climate, the scenery and wildlife. The great game reserves, of which the Kruger National Park is the largest, attract thousands of visitors from Europe, America and Africa.

Public Holidays

1985: 16 May (Ascension), 31 May (Republic Day), 5 September (Settlers' Day), 10 October (Kruger Day), 16 December (Day of the Covenant), 25–27 December (Christmas).

1986: 1 January (New Year's Day), 28–31 March (Easter).

Directory

The Constitution

Following approval by a referendum among white voters on 5 October 1960, South Africa became a republic on 31 May 1961. A new Constitution came into force on 3 September 1984. Its main points are as follows:

THE STATE PRESIDENT

The head of the Republic shall be the State President. The command-in-chief of the South African Defence Force is vested in the State President. The State President shall have power to address any House, or the Houses at a joint sitting; to confer honours; to appoint and to accredit, to receive and to recognize ambassadors, plenipotentiaries, diplomatic representatives and other diplomatic officers, consuls and consular officers; to pardon or reprieve offenders, either unconditionally or subject to such conditions as he may deem fit, and to remit any fines, penalties or forfeitures; to enter into and ratify international conventions, treaties and agreements; to proclaim or terminate martial law; to declare war and make peace; to make such appointments as he may deem fit under powers conferred upon him by any law, and to exercise such powers and perform such functions as may be conferred upon or assigned to him. The State President shall be elected by the members of an electoral college, consisting of up to 50 members of the House of Assembly designated by it by resolution; 25 members of the House of Representatives, and 13 members of the House of Delegates. The State President shall hold office during the continuance of the Parliament from which the electoral college that elected him was constituted, and shall be eligible for re-election.

OWN AFFAIRS AND GENERAL AFFAIRS

Matters which specially or differentially affect a population group in relation to the maintenance of its identity and the upholding and furtherance of its way of life, culture, traditions and customs are own affairs in relation to such population group. Matters which are not own affairs of a population group are general affairs. Any question arising as to whether any particular matters are own affairs of a population group shall be decided by the State President, who shall do so in such manner that the governmental institutions serving the interests of such population group are not by the decision enabled to affect the interests of any other population group, irrespective of whether or not it is defined as a population group in this Act. All such questions shall be general affairs.

THE EXECUTIVE AUTHORITY

The executive authority of the Republic, in regard to matters which are own affairs of any population group, is vested in the State President acting on the advice of the Ministers' Council in question; in regard to general affairs, is vested in the State President acting in consultation with the Ministers who are members of the Cabinet.

The Cabinet shall consist of the State President, who shall preside at its meetings; the Ministers appointed to administer departments of State for general affairs; any Minister appointed to perform functions other than the administration of a department of State and designated by the State President as a member of the Cabinet; and any member of a Ministers' Council designated by the State President as a member of the Cabinet, whether for an indefinite period or for a particular purpose.

A Ministers' Council shall consist of the Ministers appointed to administer departments of State for own affairs of one and the same population group; any Minister who is a member of the population group in question and who has been appointed as a member of the Ministers' Council to perform functions other than the administration of a department of State; any Deputy Minister appointed to exercise or perform powers, functions and duties on behalf of any of the Ministers; and any Minister of the Cabinet who is a member of the population group in question and who has been co-opted by the Ministers' Council as a member thereof, whether for a definite or for an indefinite period or for a particular purpose. The State President shall designate a Minister who is a member of a Ministers' Council and who, at the time of the designation, in the opinion of the State President has the support of the majority in the House consisting of members of the population group in question, as the Chairman of such Ministers' Council.

Pretoria shall be the seat of the Government of the Republic.

THE LEGISLATURE

The legislative power of the Republic is vested in the State President and the Parliament of the Republic, which, as the sovereign legislative authority in and over the Republic, shall have full power to make laws for the peace, order and good government of the Republic.

If, during the same session of Parliament, one or two Houses pass a bill and the other Houses or House rejects it; or two Houses pass different versions of a bill and the other House rejects it; or two Houses pass a bill and the other House passes a different version of it; or each of the Houses passes a different version of a bill, the State President may during that session refer the bill or the different versions thereof which have been passed, as the case may be, to the President's Council for its decision.

Cape Town shall be the seat of the Legislature of the Republic.

Parliament

Parliament shall consist of three Houses, namely, a House of Assembly, a House of Representatives and a House of Delegates. There shall be a session of Parliament at least once in every year. The first session of Parliament after the general election of members of the Houses held in pursuance of a dissolution of Parliament, shall commence within 30 days after the polling day of the election. Every Parliament shall continue for five years from the day on which its first session commences. The State President may dissolve Parliament by proclamation at any time; and shall so dissolve Parliament, unless he resigns from office, if each House, during one and the same ordinary session of Parliament, passes a motion of no confidence in the Cabinet within any period of 14 days; or rejects any bill which appropriates revenue or moneys for the ordinary annual requirements or services of the departments of State controlled by members of the Cabinet.

The Houses

The House of Assembly (representation of whites) shall consist of 166 members, each of whom shall be directly elected; four members nominated by the State President, of whom one shall be nominated from each province; eight members elected by the members of the House of Assembly, according to the principle of proportional representation, each voter having one transferable vote. The number of members of the House of Assembly to be elected in each province, shall be as follows: Cape of Good Hope 56, Natal 20, Orange Free State 14, and Transvaal 76.

The House of Representatives (representation of Coloureds) shall consist of 80 members, each of whom shall be directly elected; two members nominated by the State President; three members elected by the members of the House of Representatives, according to the principle of proportional representation, each voter having one transferable vote. The number of members of the House of Representatives to be elected in each province, shall be as follows: Cape of Good Hope 60, Natal 5, Orange Free State 5, and Transvaal 10.

The House of Delegates (representation of Indians) shall consist of 40 members, each of whom shall be directly elected; two members nominated by the State President; three members elected by the members of the House of Delegates, according to the principle of proportional representation, each voter having one transferable vote. The number of members of the House of Delegates to be elected in a province, shall be as follows: Cape of Good Hope 3, Natal 29, and Transvaal 8.

The number of members of any House to be elected in the various provinces shall not be altered until, in the case of the House of Assembly, a period of five years has elapsed from the last delimitation of its electoral divisions in terms of the previous Constitution; and in the case of the House of Representatives and the House of Delegates, a period of 10 years has elapsed for the first delimitation of the electoral divisions of the House in question in terms of this Act. The State President may make regulations in regard to the election of indirectly elected members of a House.

Every White person, Coloured person and Indian who is a South African citizen; and is of or over the age of 18 years; and is not subject to any disqualifications shall be entitled to vote at any election of a member of the House of Assembly, the House of Representatives and the House of Delegates, respectively, in the electoral division of the House in question. The Speaker of Parliament shall be the Speaker of each of the respective Houses and shall preside at a meeting of a House whenever he deems it necessary or desirable. A joint sitting of the House shall be called by the State President whenever he deems it desirable, and shall call such a joint sitting if requested to do so by all three Houses.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

The judicial authority of the Republic is vested in a Supreme Court to be known as the Supreme Court of South Africa and consisting of an Appellate Division and such provincial and local divisions as may be prescribed by law. Bloemfontein shall be the seat of the Appellate Division of the Supreme Court of South Africa. All administrative powers, duties and functions affecting the administration of justice shall be under the control of the Minister of Justice.

PRESIDENT'S COUNCIL

There shall be a President's Council consisting of up to 20 members designated by resolution of the House of Assembly; 10 members of the House of Representatives; 5 members of the House of Delegates; and 25 members appointed by the State President, 10 of whom shall be members proposed by the Opposition in the three Houses. The President's Council shall elect a Chairman from among its members. It shall be dissolved by the first dissolution of Parliament following the constitution of that Council. The President's Council shall at the request of the State President advise him on any matter referred to it by the State President for its advice, and may, in its discretion, advise him on any matter (excluding draft legislation) which, in its opinion, is of public interest.

PROVINCIAL GOVERNMENT

An administrator is appointed in each province for a term of five years. In each province there is also a provincial council consisting of the same number of members as are elected in the province for the House of Assembly, but in any province which has fewer than 20 representatives in the House of Assembly, the provincial council consists of twice as many members as the number of representatives it has in the House of Assembly. A member of a provincial council ceases to be a member on being elected to the House of Assembly. The powers of the provinces, which relate chiefly to the administration of local affairs (mainly roads, hospitals and education) are subordinate to the powers of the Central Parliament and all provincial ordinances require the consent of the State President.

An executive committee of four persons, not necessarily members of the council, together with the administrator as chairman, is elected by the provincial council at its first meeting after each general election. The administrator must act on behalf of the State President in regard to all matters in respect of which no powers are reserved or delegated to the provincial council.

New Republic Party	106,764	7.82	8
National Conservative Party‡	19,419	1.42	—
Others	3,895	0.29	—

* In addition to the 165 elected members, 20 members were nominated by the State President.

† In March 1982 16 National Party MPs were expelled from the party and subsequently formed the Conservative Party of South Africa; by June they had been joined by a further two NP MPs.

‡ Subsequently dissolved, members joining the Conservative Party of South Africa.

Note: The number of elected members was increased to 166 in 1982. Following by-elections in February 1984, the 178 seats (166 directly elected, 8 indirectly elected and 4 nominated) were distributed thus: National Party 125; Progressive Federal Party 27; Conservative Party of South Africa 18; New Republic Party 8.

Under the previous Constitution, the House of Assembly was due for re-election in 1986, but in 1984 its term of office was extended until 1989, in order to run concurrently with the other two houses.

House of Representatives

Election, 22 August 1984

Reformed Freedom Party	2,058	0.76	—
Independents†	19,209	7.14	2
Vacant‡	—		1

* In addition to the 80 directly-elected seats, two members were to be appointed by the President, and three more were to be elected by the members.

† In September 1984 one of the Independent members joined the Labour Party, and one joined the People's Congress Party, bringing the total number of seats held by these two parties to 77 (Labour Party) and 2 (People's Congress Party).

‡ A tie was recorded in the Bosmont (Johannesburg) constituency, between the Labour Party and Freedom Party candidates. As a result, a by-election was to be held at a later date.

House of Delegates

Election, 28 August 1984

Party	Votes	%	Seats*

Judicial System

The common law of the Republic of South Africa is the Roman-Dutch law, the uncodified law of Holland as it was at the time of the secession of the Cape in 1806. The law of England is not recognized as authoritative, though the principles of English law have been introduced in relation to civil and criminal procedure, evidence and mercantile matters. In all other matters, however, Roman-Dutch law prevails.

The Supreme Court consists of an Appellate Division; three Provisional Divisions and one Local Division in the Cape Province, one Provincial and one Local Division in each of the provinces of the Transvaal and Natal and one Provincial Division in the Orange Free State. Except for the fact that the local divisions in the Transvaal and Natal have no jurisdiction to hear appeals, they exercise within limited areas the same jurisdiction as Provincial Divisions.

The provinces are further divided into districts and regions with Magistrates' Courts, whose criminal and civil jurisdiction is clearly defined. From these courts appeals may be taken to the Provincial and Local Divisions of the Supreme Court, and thence to the Appellate Division.

The Press

The Press in South Africa is extremely vigorous, and an outspoken section of it supports the opposition. The English-language newspapers have considerable freedom of expression but in October 1974, the Newspaper Press Union amended its code of conduct under strong government pressure and empowered the South African Press Council to fine newspaper editors up to R 10,000 if they infringed it. The new amendments related to security matters and stirring up of inter-racial feeling, and were strongly criticized for their vagueness by some editors.

Under the Publications Act of 1974 the Publications Control Board had its powers extended, and appeal to the courts against its decisions was removed. This tightened still further the censorship prevailing in South Africa, particularly regarding reading material and the cinema. The Newspaper Press Union members were exempted from the provisions of the Act.

In February 1982 the Steyn Commission recommended the compulsory registration of all journalists, but this proposal of the Commission was abandoned later in the year in favour of self-discipline by an independent media council. The Protection of Information Act (June 1982) imposes penalties on the publication of matter prejudicial to national security.

TRADE UNIONS

All workers in South Africa enjoy full freedom of association. Amendments to labour legislation now allow for all trade unions to operate on either a racial or a multiracial basis, and an increasing number of unions are in the process of becoming multiracial. Trade unions that register with the Department of Manpower enjoy certain benefits, principally that of full participation in all industrial relations structures and procedures as set out in the Labour Relations Act. However, some black unions remain unregistered, and these are not illegal. In 1982 there were 199 registered and 28 unregistered unions. There are four major groupings of trade unions (CUSA, FOSATU, SACOL and TUCSA) and, in addition, a sizeable number of unions with no affiliation. Total membership of unaffiliated unions was over 300,000 in 1982.

Transport

RAILWAYS

With a few minor exceptions, the state-controlled South African Transport Services Board owns and operates all the South African railways systems (23,720 route-km in 1984, of which 2,340 km was in Namibia, 280 km in Transkei, 86 km in Bophuthatswana, 96 km in Ciskei and 2 km in Lesotho) and also operates an extensive network of road transport services, which serves primarily to develop rural areas, but also acts as feeder to the railways. The electrified lines totalled 16,271 track-km in 1984.

South African Transport Services Board: Private Bag X483, Pretoria 0001; Chair. Minister of Transport Services; Commrs A. S. D. Erasmus, P. L. S. Aucamp, J. T. Albertyn; Dir-Gen. Dr E. L. Grové, Private Bag X47, Johannesburg 2000.

ROADS

In 1981 the total road network was 183,651 km, excluding roads in Transkei, Bophuthatswana, Venda and Ciskei. This total comprised 1,331 km of motorways, 1,271 km of main roads, 44,966 km of secondary roads and 136,083 km of gravel roads, and 25.9% of the network was paved.

National Transport Commission: Dept of Transport, Private Bag X193, Pretoria 0001; responsible for location, planning, design, construction and maintenance of national roads.

SHIPPING

The principal harbours are at Cape Town, Mossel Bay, Port Elizabeth, East London and Durban. The country's first deep-water port, at Richards Bay, was opened in April 1976, and is being extended. Saldanha Bay is a major bulk-handling port.

More than 30 shipping lines serve South African ports. In 1983 South Africa's merchant fleet totalled 990 vessels with a tonnage exceeding 755,334.

South African Shipping Board: Secretariat: Dept of Transport, PB X193, Pretoria 0001; tel. 2902904; telex 3615; f. 1929; advises the Ministry of Transport Services on any matter connected with sea transport to, from or between any of the Republic's ports, particularly with regard to freight rates.

CIVIL AVIATION

Civil aviation is controlled by the Minister of Transport Services. The National Transport Commission is responsible for licensing and control of air services. Executive and administrative work of the National Transport Commission is carried out by the Department of Transport.

Atomic Energy

South Africa was one of the first members of the International Atomic Energy Agency, but was excluded from the Board of Governors in June 1977. In July 1982 the Atomic Energy Corporation of South Africa Ltd was established, after a reorganization of state-funded atomic energy bodies. The country's first nuclear power station, Koeberg, situated at Duynefontein in the western Cape, began operating in March 1984. The pilot uranium enrichment plant at Valindaba, near Pretoria, is being extended into a production plant, and is due to come into operation in 1987. Production of enriched uranium was confirmed in April 1981 and, later that year, the French contractors building Koeberg announced that sufficient enriched uranium had been acquired for the first core-loading of the reactors. South Africa had not signed the Nuclear Non-Proliferation Treaty by early 1984, but it pledged to conduct its nuclear affairs in accordance with the spirit, principles, and goals of the treaty in February.

THE BANTU HOMELANDS

Blacks within the Republic of South Africa are represented in their own homeland governments, established for various national units. The Bantu Authorities Act, 1951, provided for tribal, regional and territorial authorities, with matters such as educational institutions, roads and hospitals under their control. The Promotion of Bantu Self-Government Act, 1959, established eight national units in respect of the black population and provided for the appointment of Commissioners-General to serve as links between the national units and the central government. The Transkei Territorial Authority was set up in 1962. As the next step to independence which the South African Government has promised the Homelands, the Transkei Constitution Act, 1963, provided for self-government for the Xhosa national unit with an Executive Council presided over by a Chief Minister elected by a Legislative Assembly. The Bantu Homelands Constitution Act, 1971, empowered the State President to promulgate constitutions for any Bantu area for which a Territorial Authority has been established. Territorial Authorities are disestablished when Executive Councils are constituted for such areas.

Bophuthatswana (June 1972), the Ciskei (August 1972), Lebowa (October 1972), Gazankulu (February 1973), KwaZulu (April 1973), Qwaqwa (November 1974) and KwaNdebele (October 1977) have since been granted 'self-government'. KaNgwane was granted a certain measure of 'self-government' in 1981, but did not receive formal 'self-governing' status until August 1984 (see below). Transkei was declared independent in October 1976, Bophuthatswana in December 1977, Venda in September 1979 and Ciskei in December 1981. In 1984 a committee, composed of members of the South African Government and representatives from KwaNdebele, was to begin considering that territory's prospective transition to independence. In 1982 the South African Government attempted to transfer KaNgwane and the Ingwavuma area of Kwazulu to the Kingdom of Swaziland, but this was disallowed by the Supreme Court. The proposed transfer was strongly opposed by the Chief Minister of KwaZulu, Chief Gatsha Buthelezi, and by KaNgwane, and in June 1984 South Africa dissolved the commission which had been set up to examine the dispute over the transfer, and reportedly gave an assurance that the South African Government would not proceed with the transfer unless the move had the majority support of the people concerned. In August KaNgwane was formally granted 'self-government', a measure which was seen as an indication that South Africa had abandoned the transfer plans. Chief Buthelezi has strongly opposed the Homelands policy and called for majority rule in South Africa, and in October 1983 he and five other Homelands leaders rejected the constitutional reforms which had been adopted by the South African government, as they continue to exclude blacks from participation in central government. Chief Buthelezi and the Chief Ministers of both Lebowa and KaNgwane have stated that they will never accept full 'independence' from South Africa for their territories, and in June 1984 Buthelezi and the Lebowa Chief Minister, Dr Cedric Phatudi, reportedly issued a statement condemning both apartheid and the new Constitution.

Population (1980): 11,930,930.

BOPHUTHATSWANA

The Republic of Bophuthatswana was declared independent by South Africa on 6 December 1977. This independence has not been recognized by any government other than the South African Government, nor by the United Nations, and by March 1985 South Africa was the only country to have diplomatic links with Bophuthatswana.

Bophuthatswana consists of seven scattered land-locked enclaves surrounded by South Africa and Botswana. The administration is seeking to consolidate the territory and in September 1980 the town of Mafikeng (formerly Mafeking) was incorporated into Bophuthatswana, at the cost to the South African Government of an estimated R3m. in compensation to white inhabitants. Further consolidation proposals were announced by the South African Government in 1983, and in October the white town of Thaba Nchu was incorporated into Bophuthatswana. At independence the total area of the territory was 40,330 sq km (15,571 sq miles), but this had increased through consolidation to 44,000 sq km (16,988 sq miles) by 1983. The South African Government announced further consolidation plans for the territory in 1984. The population is predominantly Setswana-speaking but there are important Pedi, Shangana, Xhosa, South Sotho and Zulu minorities. The flag (proportions 3 by 2) is dark blue, divided by an orange diagonal stripe, from the lower hoist to the upper fly, with a white disc, containing a representation of a leopard's head, in the upper hoist. The capital is the newly-built city of Mmabatho.

Under the Status of Bophuthatswana Act, 1977, South Africa deprived all residents of the territory of South African citizenship, including two-thirds of the population living outside the territorial boundaries. Following the first general election since independence, the Bophuthatswana Democratic Party, which opposed this legislation and seeks territorial consolidation, holds all the seats in the Legislative Assembly. The majority of the inhabitants are dependent on mining and agriculture, although only 6.6% of the land area is arable. In 1984 Bophuthatswana was the world's largest producer of platinum, providing about 30% of total world production. Small industries are being established, but wage levels are lower than in South Africa, to which about 65% of the labour force travel daily to work. Of Bophuthatswana's total budget revenue, only 18% was provided from within the territory prior to independence. This proportion has since increased to 74%, thus reducing assistance from the South African Government to 26% of revenue. A new airport near Mmabatho was opened in June 1984.

Population (1980 census): 1,300,000 (excl. 1,200,000 Batswana resident in South Africa).

Budget (million rand, 1984/85): Revenue 606.9; Expenditure 538.8.

Gross domestic product (million rand, 1982/83): Total 701 (mining and quarrying 250).

Education: (1983) 1,115 schools; 13,708 teachers; 485,680 pupils; (1984) University of Bophuthatswana: 1,269 students.

THE CONSTITUTION

Under the provisions of the independence Constitution, executive power resides in the President, who is directly elected by general suffrage. The President appoints, and acts on the advice of, an Executive Council. There is a unicameral Legislative Assembly of 108 members, of whom 72 are elected by popular vote, 24 are nominated by regional authorities, and 12 are designated by the President. For the general elections held in October 1982, only 270,000 Bophuthatswanans registered to vote, including only 480 of those living in the Republic of South Africa. A second-tier system of local government provides for 76 tribal and community authorities represented in 12 regional authorities.

CISKEI

The Republic of Ciskei was declared independent by South Africa on 4 December 1981 but (as with Transkei, Bophuthatswana and Venda) has not been recognized by any government other than South Africa's. Ciskeian independence was also opposed by the Transkei Government as it divided the Xhosa people of Ciskei and Transkei.

Ciskei is a small wedge-shaped territory of 8,500 sq km (3,280 sq miles) in the Eastern Cape, close to the western border of Transkei. The two Homelands are divided by a narrow strip of land containing the towns of East London and King William's Town, where many of the inhabitants of Ciskei work. The Van der Walt Commission on Bantustan land consolidation recommended that King William's Town be included in Ciskei, but the South African Government ignored the advice after a referendum among the town's white voters had overwhelmingly rejected cession. A new capital for Ciskei is being built at Bisho. The population of Ciskei at independence was about 660,000, but a further 1.4m. Africans were deprived of South African citizenship and declared Ciskei nationals, although permanently resident in the Republic of South Africa. Ciskei's national flag is a white diagonal band with a symbolic crane superimposed on a blue background. The official languages are Xhosa and English.

In July 1983 President Lennox Sebe curtailed a visit to Israel, following rumours that an attempted coup was being planned against him in Ciskei. On his return to the homeland, he accused his brothers, Gen. Charles Sebe, then Head of the Ciskei Central Intelligence Service (CIS) and Commander-in-Chief of Security, and Namba Sebe, then Minister of Transport, of plotting against him, and both were arrested. General Charles Sebe was stripped of his powers of arrest, and the CIS was dissolved. General Charles Sebe's previous powers over the army and the police were ceded to a newly-established Ministry of Defence and to the Ministry of Justice, both of which were subordinate to the new State Security Council, headed by President Sebe. General Charles Sebe was subsequently sentenced to twelve years' imprisonment in June 1984. Shortly after this sentence was passed, Ciskei accused South Africa of interfering in its internal affairs, and alleged that the South African Foreign Minister had requested during a visit to Ciskei that the Ciskei Government act leniently towards Gen. Charles Sebe. President Sebe also accused the South African Government of failing to meet its obligations to Ciskei. South Africa denied both allegations, and reportedly threatened to end further economic aid and loans to Ciskei unless the financial management of the territory improved. In July, however, President Sebe claimed that differences between the two Governments had been resolved.

Early in 1985 relations with South Africa deteriorated once more when Ciskei suspended three officers of the South African Defence Force (SADF) who were seconded to the Ciskei Defence Force, following an inquiry into the deaths of two Ciskei soldiers at military bases in the homeland. In response to the suspension of the officers, in January the South African Government withdrew all SADF personnel on secondment to the Ciskei Defence Force. In the same month it was reported that a government reshuffle had taken place in Ciskei, following the findings of the inquiry into the deaths of the Ciskeian soldiers.

In August 1983 there was unrest in the township of Mdantsane, when thousands of commuters boycotted buses following a 10% fares increase. A state of emergency was declared in the area, and at least five people were killed when police attempted to break the boycott. The Government also banned the South African Allied Workers' Union, and in September it was reported that vigilantes had been deployed against the boycotters. By December the situation appeared to be more stable, and it was reported that President Sebe had proposed measures designed to placate the boycotters. However, the boycott continued during 1984, but in July prospects for a settlement of the issue improved when it was announced that the fares increase was to be abandoned.

Economically, Ciskei has limited natural resources and relies on the earnings of migrant labourers in South Africa for 65% of its national income. At independence South Africa provided 77% of the Ciskei Government's revenue in direct aid. The dry climate makes agriculture difficult and Ciskei is not self-sufficient in food, although pineapples are grown quite successfully. The Ciskeian National Development Corporation encourages industrial growth, the main centre being at Dimbaza. There are also small industrial complexes at Mdantsane and Zwelitsha. Construction work on an international airport, to be built some 10 km from Bisho at a cost of about US $20m., was to begin in May 1984.

Area: 8,500 sq km (3,280 sq miles).

Population (1981): 660,000 (de jure population 2,100,000).

THE CONSTITUTION

The Head of State is the President, who is elected by the National Assembly following general elections which are held every five years. However, in June 1983 the National Assembly granted President Sebe the position for life. In accordance with the provisions of the Republic of Ciskei Constitution Act of 1981, the President is also Commander-in-Chief of the armed forces. A Vice-President and an Executive Council of 10 are appointed by the President. The President is empowered to establish such Departments of State as are deemed necessary for government, and shall appoint persons to administer them. The Assembly consists of 50 elected members and 37 hereditary chiefs. All Ciskeians over 18, whether they live inside the territory or not, are entitled to vote. The President can dissolve the Assembly at any time on the request of the Executive Council or National Assembly.

THE GOVERNMENT

TRANSKEI

The Republic of Transkei was declared independent by the Republic of South Africa on 26 October 1976. To the best of our knowledge no internationally recognized country other than the Republic of South Africa has yet recognized its independence by establishing diplomatic relations with it. Whenever the Iriphabliki Yetranskei is successful in securing such international recognition, the facts will, of course, be recorded in future editions of this book—ED.

The period following the proclamation of an independent Transkei has been one of persistent conflict with South Africa over two principal issues, those of the status of Transkei nationals resident in South Africa and of Transkei's claim to East Griqualand, a fertile agricultural region along the northern border with Natal, near Kokstad.

At independence, the 1.5m. people of Transkei origin living in South Africa were declared Transkei nationals by the South African Government. They were deprived of South African citizenship but were, none the less, still subject to pass laws and other racial legislation. Repeated objections by the Transkei Government to South Africa's treatment of this population as 'nothing more than a source of permanent black contract labour' has remained a serious cause of contention between the two Governments. In 1981 Transkei disputed South Africa's right to send Africans, allegedly Transkei nationals, living in squatter camps in the Cape Town area to Transkei.

The Transkeian claim on East Griqualand, which was finally dismissed by South Africa in, according to Transkei's Prime Minister, Chief Matanzima, 'a contemptuous and brutal manner', led to Transkei's severing diplomatic relations with South Africa on 10 April 1978. In view of Transkei's heavy economic dependence on South Africa (which underwrote R113.5m. of the country's R328m. budget estimate for 1978/79), this move caused considerable scepticism in some international circles, which viewed the move as an attempt by Transkei to obtain independent diplomatic recognition and relieve internal dissension.

The break was accepted with surprisingly little reaction from Pretoria and was followed by the withdrawal of both sets of diplomatic representatives on 30 April. Ten days later, Transkei cancelled its non-aggression pact with South Africa and insisted that no South African military aircraft overfly its airspace and that no South African naval vessels enter its territorial waters. South Africa retaliated by cancelling its agreement to train Transkeian soldiers.

Following the break, Transkei indicated that it would accept economic aid from any country prepared to offer it. However, lacking a recognized international status, Transkei has no access to UN agencies or the World Bank. Transkei nevertheless decided to press forward with a wide range of infrastructural development schemes, including the construction of an international airport, a harbour and free port complex, and a new university. The Government was reported to have negotiated a long-term loan of R167m. from a consortium of private investors, thought to represent Middle East interests, to bridge the 1978/79 budget deficit. Transkei faced a budget deficit of R37m. in the 1979/80 financial year and approaches were made to private sources within South Africa itself to offset the shortfall. In October 1979 the National Assembly's Committee on Public Accounts reported a general breakdown of financial administration in various departments. In February 1980 Transkei announced the resumption of diplomatic relations with South Africa. In 1982/83 some 81% of Transkei's government revenue was provided by transfers from South Africa in direct grants, Customs Union and other payments.

Numerous African political and religious organizations have been banned, and a state of emergency was declared in June 1980 during a spate of unrest among school pupils, which was renewed in 1981 and 1982. At general elections held in September 1981 the ruling Transkei National Independence Party won all but one of the 75 elected seats. In May 1984 there was unrest at the University of Transkei, following the unexplained detention of some students. More than 1,000 of the university's 2,500 students boycotted lectures, in protest at the detentions, and police subsequently launched a baton charge on the campus and detained some 137 students. Six members of the academic staff of the university were deported, and, following an emergency meeting of the university council to discuss the troubles, classes at the university were suspended until July 1984. Two more members of the university's academic staff were deported in August.

Area: 41,002 sq km (15,831 sq miles).

Population (1980, de facto): 2,334,946 (incl. 5,367 whites, 5,927 Coloureds and 210 Asians).

Budget (R million): 1984/85: Estimated Expenditure 798.4 (Education 148).

THE CONSTITUTION

The independence Constitution provides for Umtata to be the seat of government. Executive power resides in the President, elected by the National Assembly for a seven-year term. He acts on the advice of an Executive Council, appointed by the President, of not more than 15 ministers. All powers, authorities and functions of the President of South Africa have been transferred to the President of Transkei, although certain matters (such as those relating to defence and customs and excise) are administered jointly with South Africa.

There is a unicameral National Assembly, with 150 members: 75 chiefs and paramount chiefs, who are co-opted by their peers, and 75 members who are elected for five years by universal suffrage of all Transkeian citizens aged 21 or over.

The National Assembly has repealed about 100 South African Acts, including the 1950 Group Areas Act, the 1953 Reservation of Separate Amenities Act and the 1964 Coloured Persons' Representative Council Act.

All citizens and residents of Transkei are 'assured of social, political and economic justice, freedom of speech, assembly and worship, and unimpeded access to and equality before the law'. (However, in 1977 legislation was introduced making it a capital offence to criticize Transkeian sovereignty or the officers of state.) Africans of Xhosa origin living outside Transkei are given the option of becoming citizens.

The official language is Xhosa, although Sesotho, Afrikaans and English are used for judicial, legislative and administrative purposes.

VENDA

The Republic of Venda was declared independent by South Africa on 13 September 1979. As with Bophuthatswana, Transkei and Ciskei, international recognition has not been forthcoming and the UN Security Council issued a statement on 21 September condemning the 'so-called independence of Venda' as 'totally invalid'.

Venda consists of two linked land masses in the north-east corner of the Transvaal with a total area of 6,500 sq km (2,510 sq miles), subject to further territorial consolidation. A narrow strip of land to the north separates Venda from the Limpopo River, the southernmost boundary of Zimbabwe. The population consists of a multiplicity of related tribal groups, but all speak the same language, Luvenda, which is one of the three official languages along with English and Afrikaans. The capital is Thohoyandou. The Status of Venda Act, which passed its final stages in the South African Parliament on 21 June 1979, contains citizenship provisions similar to those adopted when Transkei and Bophuthatswana were granted independence. Some 500,000 Vhavenda became citizens of the new state, about 170,000 of whom live permanently outside the territorial boundaries. Nearly 70% of Venda's male labour force work within the Republic of South Africa.

Domestic economic activity consists mainly of agriculture and forestry, although the Government is promoting agro-industries and small business. Important deposits of coal have been found in the west and north-east which are to be exploited when Venda's infrastructure has been sufficiently improved. By November 1982 28 small industries had been established through the Venda Development Corporation. The soil is fertile and rainfall plentiful, and cattle ranching and the production of subtropical fruit are areas of high economic potential.

Area: 6,500 sq km (2,510 sq miles).

Population (1980): 513,890 (de facto) (de jure figures not yet available).

Budget (R million): 1982/83: Expenditure 115.1.

THE CONSTITUTION

Under the terms of the independence Constitution, which came into effect on 13 September 1979, executive power is vested in the President, who is Head of State and Commander-in-Chief of the National Force. The President is elected by the members of the National Assembly and holds office for a period not exceeding the five-year life of the Assembly, after which he becomes subject to re-election. The Assembly may be dissolved by the President at any time. The President appoints an Executive Council of Ministers of State who must all be members of the National Assembly.

The unicameral Assembly normally consists of 45 members elected by popular vote, 3 presidential appointees, 28 mahosi (chiefs) and 15 members designated by Venda's four regional councils. All existing tribal, community and regional authorities, such as those of the mahosi and magota (headmen), are retained with their traditional status and powers under the Constitution.

THE GOVERNMENT

SPANISH NORTH AFRICA

Introduction

Spanish North Africa comprises mainly two enclaves within Moroccan territory: Ceuta, on the north African coast opposite Gibraltar, the Strait here being about 25 km wide; and Melilla, situated on a small peninsula jutting into the Mediterranean Sea. Attached to Melilla, for administrative purposes, are Peñón de Vélez de la Gomera, a small fort on the Mediterranean coast, and two groups of islands, Peñón de Alhucemas and the Chafarinas.

An ancient port and walled city, Ceuta was retained by Spain upon Moroccan independence in 1956. Having developed as a military and administrative centre for the former Spanish Protectorate in Morocco, Ceuta now functions as a bunkering and fishing port. In 1974 the town became the seat of the Capitanía General de Africa. Two-thirds of Ceuta's land area are used exclusively for military purposes.

Melilla was the first Spanish town to rise against the government of the Popular Front in July 1936, at the beginning of the Spanish Civil War. Like Ceuta, Melilla was retained by Spain when Morocco became independent in 1956. In addition to its function as a port, Melilla now serves as a military base, more than one-half of the enclave's land area being used solely for military purposes.

Spanish North Africa is administered as an integral part of Spain (Ceuta as part of Cádiz Province; Melilla and the other outposts as part of Málaga Province), although this arrangement is disputed in the territories. Ceuta, Melilla and the island dependencies are known as plazas de soberanía, fortified enclaves over which Spain has full sovereign rights. The population of the enclaves is overwhelmingly Spanish, although the proportion of Arab residents is increasing, particularly in Melilla. Those born in the territories are Spanish citizens and subjects. In both Ceuta and Melilla civil authority is vested in an official (Delegado del Gobierno) directly responsible to the Ministry of the Interior in Madrid. He is usually assisted by a government sub-delegate. There is also one delegate from each of the Ministries in Madrid. Military authority is vested in a commandant-general. The enclaves are attached to the military region of Sevilla. Spain had 19,000 troops deployed in Spanish North Africa in July 1984.

The Spanish Government was embarrassed by remarks made in October 1984 by a senior general in the Spanish army, concerning the inadequacy of the enclaves' defences against any Moroccan attack. Following the opening of the Spanish frontier with the British dependent territory of Gibraltar, in early 1985 Morocco reiterated its claim to Ceuta and Melilla. King Hassan indicated, however, that he desired a political solution to the problem.

In 1984 there was increasing unease over Spanish North Africa's future. The riots in Morocco in January and the signing of the treaty of union between Libya and Morocco in August gave rise to disquiet. Both Ceuta and Melilla are free ports. High ferry-boat fares and the opening of the Spanish border with Gibraltar were expected to have an adverse effect on the enclaves' duty-free trade. Proposed defence cuts led not only to fears for Spanish North Africa's security but also to fears of losses in income from military personnel. Agricultural activity is negligible, and industry is on a limited scale. In December 1982 unemployment stood at 2,864 in Ceuta and at 1,813 in Melilla. Most of the population's food is imported, with the exception of fish which is obtained locally.

Upon the accession of Spain to the EEC, it is envisaged that Ceuta and Melilla will be considered as Spanish cities and European territory, and will join the Community as part of Spain.

Tourism

Melilla has 13 hotels.

PEÑÓN DE VÉLEZ, PEÑÓN DE ALHUCEMAS AND CHAFARINAS

These three rocky islets, situated respectively just west and east of Alhucemas and east of Melilla off the north coast of Morocco, are administered with Melilla. The Chafarinas Islands lie about 4 km off the Cabo de Agua. Peñón de Alhucemas is situated about 1 km from the coast opposite Ajdir. Peñón de Vélez de la Gomera is situated about 80 km farther west. In 1982 the populations of Peñón de Vélez, Peñón de Alhucemas and the Chafarinas were respectively 60, 61 and 191, mostly fishermen.

SRI LANKA

Introductory Survey

Location, Climate, Language, Religion, Flag, Capital

The Democratic Socialist Republic of Sri Lanka lies in southern Asia. It comprises one large island and several much smaller ones, situated in the Indian Ocean, about 80 km (50 miles) east of the southern tip of India. The climate is tropical, with an average annual temperature of about 27°C (81°F) in Colombo. There is very little seasonal variation in temperature: the monthly average in Colombo ranges from 25°C (77°F) to 28°C (82°F). The south-western part of the island receives rain from both the south-west and the north-east monsoons: average annual rainfall in Colombo is 2,365 mm (93 in). Sinhala, Tamil and English are all recognized national languages. The official language, Sinhala, is spoken by over 70% of the people. Nearly 70% of the population are Buddhist, about 15% are Tamil-speaking Hindus and there are important Christian (mostly Roman Catholic) and Muslim minorities. The national flag (proportions 35 by 18) consists mainly of a dark crimson rectangular panel, with a yellow border, in the fly. In the centre of the panel is a gold lion, carrying a sword, while in each corner (also in gold) there is a leaf of the bo (bodhi) tree, which is sacred to Buddhists. At the hoist are two vertical stripes, also edged in yellow, to represent Sri Lanka's minorities: one of green (for Muslims) and one of orange (for Tamils). The capital is Colombo. The seat of government returned to the ancient capital of Sri Jayawardenepura Kotte in 1982, in preparation for the transfer of the capital.

Recent History

Sri Lanka, known as Ceylon until 1972, gained its independence from the United Kingdom in February 1948. From then until 1956, for a brief period in 1960 and from 1965 to 1970 the country was ruled, latterly in coalition, by the United National Party (UNP), which was concerned to protect the rights of the Tamils. The socialist Sri Lanka Freedom Party (SLFP), formed in 1951 by Solomon Bandaranaike, emphasized the national heritage, winning the support of groups that advocated the recognition of Sinhala as the official language and the establishment of Buddhism as the predominant religion. The SLFP won the 1956 elections decisively and remained in power, except for a three-month interruption in 1960, until 1965, having formed a coalition government with the Lanka Sama Samaj Party (LSSP), a Trotskyist group, in 1964. Following the assassination of Solomon Bandaranaike in 1959, his widow, Sirimavo Bandaranaike, took over the leadership of the SLFP. At the 1970 elections the SLFP became the leading partner of a United Front coalition government with the LSSP and the Communist Party (Moscow Wing).

In 1971 the United Front Government suppressed an uprising led by the left-wing Janatha Vimukti Peramuna (People's Liberation Front). A state of emergency was declared, and the party was banned. A new People's Liberation Front emerged, led by Mahinda Wijesekera. In 1976 the main Tamil party, the Federal Party, and other Tamil groups formed the Tamil United Liberation Front (TULF), calling for a separate Tamil state (Eelam) in the northern and eastern parts of the country.

In December 1976 the Communists supported strikes of transport unions which were initiated by the UNP and the LSSP (which had been expelled from the coalition in 1975). The strikes ended in January 1977, and in February Sirimavo Bandaranaike prorogued the National State Assembly until 19 May. Several members of the SLFP resigned, and seven members of the Communist Party left the coalition government, forming an independent group within the Opposition. The state of emergency was lifted in February 1977, and general elections were held in July, accompanied by widespread violence. The UNP won the elections, with an overwhelming majority, and Junius Jayawardene became Prime Minister. In August riots broke out between the Sinhalese majority and the Tamil minority. The TULF, which had become the main opposition party, increased its demands for an independent Tamil state. In October a constitutional amendment was passed to establish a presidential system of government, and in February 1978 Jayawardene became the country's first executive President.

Continued violence and pressure from the Tamils during 1978 led the Government to make some concessions, such as the recognition of the Tamil language, in the new Constitution of the Democratic Socialist Republic of Sri Lanka, which came into force in September 1978. In view of this, the Ceylon Workers' Congress joined the Government, but the TULF remained undecided, mainly for fear of reprisals by Tamil extremists. Continuing violence prompted the declaration of a state of emergency in July 1979 in Jaffna, where the Tamils are in a majority. At the same time, severe anti-terrorist legislation was passed in Parliament (as the National State Assembly had been renamed in 1978), and a presidential commission was established to study the Tamil problem.

In June 1980 a general strike, called by left-wing trade unions in a bid for higher wages, led to the declaration of a state of emergency between July and August, and more than 40,000 government workers lost their jobs.

In August 1980 the TULF agreed to the establishment of District Development Councils, providing for a wide measure of regional autonomy. Elections to these, held in June 1981, were boycotted by the SLFP, the LSSP and the Communist Party, and the UNP won control of 18 of the 24 Councils. Subsequent communal disturbances between Sinhalese and Tamils led to the imposition of a state of emergency in the north for five days in June, and throughout the country from August 1981 to January 1982. Tamil MPs proposed a motion of 'no confidence' in the Government and subsequently boycotted Parliament until November 1981, when a peace initiative to ease racial tension was proposed by the Government.

In October 1980 the former Prime Minister, Sirimavo Bandaranaike, was found guilty of having abused power by a special presidential commission, which deprived her of all civic rights and effectively prevented her from standing in the next elections. Family disputes within the SLFP culminated in December 1981, when Sirimavo Bandaranaike dismissed from the party her son, Anura, and several leading members. They formed a breakaway group but rejoined the SLFP in 1982.

In August 1982 Parliament approved an amendment to the 1978 Constitution which enabled President Jayawardene to call a presidential election before his term of office expired, i.e. after four years instead of six. Sri Lanka's first presidential election was held in October, and Jayawardene was returned to office with 53% of the votes cast. The SLFP candidate, Hector Kobbekaduwa, polled 39%, despite his party's disarray and Sirimavo Bandaranaike's loss of civic rights; she was unable to campaign, but her cause was helped when one of her trial judges was found guilty of corruption.

Following this success, the President announced, with the approval of Parliament and the Supreme Court, that, instead of a general election, a referendum would be held to decide whether to prolong the life of Parliament for a further six years after the session ended in July 1983. A state of emergency was in force between October 1982 and January 1983, and all opposition newspapers were closed by the Government. Sirimavo Bandaranaike was allowed to campaign in the referendum, which took place in December 1982 and resulted in approval of the proposal to prolong Parliament until 1989. On a 71% turnout, 55% (3.1m.) voted in favour, with the dissenting minority of 2.6m. being concentrated mainly in the northern Tamil state of Jaffna.

In May 1983 by-elections were held for seats where the UNP had fared badly in both the presidential election and the referendum, and the UNP won 14 of the 18 seats. This was accompanied by notable success in the local government elections held concurrently, although the TULF was successful in Tamil-speaking areas. The UNP had now consolidated its hold on the electorate, having comprehensively defeated its opponents in four polls at national level between October 1982 and June 1983.

A state of emergency was declared in May 1983 to combat mounting terrorism, and in June Tamil terrorist activity led to army reprisals and the worst outbreak of violence for many years, with more than 400 deaths and particularly severe rioting in Jaffna and Colombo. A curfew and press censorship were imposed, and three left-wing parties were banned. In July the 16 TULF MPs resigned in protest at the extension of Parliament, as approved by the referendum. In August Parliament passed a 'no-separation' amendment to the constitution, depriving those espousing separatism of their civil rights. In October the 16 TULF MPs were found to have forfeited their seats because of their boycott. After much discussion and with the informal mediation of India, the All-Party Conference (APC) began in January 1984. The APC comprised representatives of the Buddhist, Christian and Muslim faiths as well as political leaders from the Sinhalese and Tamil communities. The TULF MPs participated, and in February made a major concession over separatism if an acceptable solution to the Tamil problem could be found. In return, the Government proposed to establish provincial councils, with some regional autonomy, throughout the country. Constitutional provisions for the use of the Tamil language would be implemented, and an amnesty would be offered to terrorists, while the army would be withdrawn from Jaffna if the violence ended, and a second parliamentary chamber would be established. The TULF demanded regional devolution which would enable the northern province, with its Tamil majority, to amalgamate with the eastern province where the Tamils were in a minority and thus create a Tamil state within the framework of a united Sri Lanka. The Sinhalese and the Muslims were implacably opposed to this proposal. The APC was finally abandoned in October 1984, without agreement on the crucial question of the extent of regional autonomy. However, a decision was reached on the plight of the stateless Tamils of Indian origin. The draft legislation concerning regional autonomy was abandoned in December.

Further violent outbursts in the northern part of the island in November and December led to the proclamation of another state of emergency. There were widespread accusations of gross military indiscipline, and there was condemnation of government-sponsored settlement of Sinhalese in Tamil areas. A restricted zone was established between Mannar and Mullaitivu, to prevent contact with the Indian state of Tamil Nadu, where many of the Tamil militants were based. This prohibition caused hardship by impeding coastal fishing in the area, which normally provided around 36% of Sri Lanka's total catch. In January 1985 President Jayawardene stated that he would not negotiate with any party advocating separatism.

In foreign policy, Sri Lanka has adopted a non-aligned role. Negotiations have been held with India since 1964 on the repatriation of stateless Tamils of Indian origin. In 1984 India granted citizenship to 600,000 people, while Sri Lanka agreed to accept the remaining 468,000 as citizens. Sri Lanka's relations with India were greatly strained with the outbreaks of violence in 1983, when there seemed to be a very real threat of Indian intervention. However, confidence was restored when India mediated informally between the Sri Lankan Government and the TULF MPs to bring about the multi-party talks. In 1984 President Jayawardene made official visits to the People's Republic of China, Japan, the Republic of Korea, the USA, the United Kingdom and also India, where he drew attention to the problems posed by Tamil terrorists operating in Jaffna from bases in Tamil Nadu.

Government

A presidential form of Government was adopted in October 1977 and confirmed in the Constitution of September 1978. The Constitution provides for a unicameral Parliament as the supreme legislative body, its members being elected by a system of modified proportional representation. Executive powers are vested in the President, who is Head of State. He is directly elected for a term of six years, but he is not accountable to Parliament. He has the power to appoint or dismiss the Prime Minister and members of the Cabinet, and may assume any portfolio. He is empowered to dismiss Parliament. In 1982 the Constitution was amended, allowing the President to call a presidential election before his first term of office was completed. In 1983 the constitution was further amended to include a 'no-separation' clause, making any division of Sri Lanka illegal, and any advocates of separatism liable to lose their civic rights.

Sri Lanka comprises 24 administrative districts, each with an appointed Governor and elected Development Council.

Defence

In July 1984 the armed forces totalled 16,560: army 11,000, navy 2,960, air force 2,600. Defence expenditure for 1985 was an estimated Rs 3,000m., an eightfold increase on the 1977 figure. Military service is voluntary.

Economic Affairs

The predominantly rural population is concentrated in the wet south and south-west regions, where rubber, tea and coconuts are grown. About one-half of the working population are engaged in agriculture, forestry and fishing, which together provided 26.6% of the gross domestic product (GDP), in 1983. In 1984 the State owned about 60% of the area under tea, about 30% of the rubber plantations and about 10% of the coconut trees. Company-owned tea estates, both foreign and domestic, were nationalized in 1975. Since then the annual output of made tea has never equalled the record harvest of 228,000 metric tons in 1965, mainly because of mismanagement, a slow replanting rate and a shortage of workers. Even so, Sri Lanka became the world's largest exporter of tea in 1978, when tea and rubber (plantation crops) and coconut (a smallholders' crop) together contributed about 70% of total export earnings. In 1983 earnings from the exports of the three primary products totalled Rs 12,557m., almost 50% of total visible export earnings. In 1985 the Government launched a five-year investment programme for the tea, coconut and rubber plantations at a cost of US $200m. In 1984 an estimated 208,000 tons of tea, 139,500 tons of rubber and 2m. tons of paddy rice were produced, compared with 179,000 tons of tea, 135,000 tons of rubber and 2.5m. tons of rice in 1983. Coconut production reached an estimated 1,820m. nuts in 1984, and was expected to increase to 2,500m. nuts in 1985. Rice is the staple diet, and the People's Republic of China was the main supplier for 27 years, but three record harvests meant that no rice was imported from China in 1979. By 1984 Sri Lanka was almost self-sufficient in rice. Production dropped in 1982, because of drought, but it recovered in 1983 and 1984. The annual output of paddy rice quadrupled from about 450,000 tons in the early 1950s to about 2m. tons in the early 1980s because of an increase in area under cultivation and an improvement in yields.

The Mahaveli Development Project has improved irrigation and, when it is completed in 1986, will provide hydroelectric power for the whole island and an estimated 200,000 jobs in agriculture and related services. The Rs 8,500m. Victoria Dam project, started in March 1980, aims to provide irrigation for some 100,000 acres of land. It was inaugurated in April 1985. The Maduru Oya reservoir project was completed in October 1984 and will irrigate 1,400 ha of land.

The only commercially important mineral is graphite, although there are also deposits of iron ore, monazite, ilmenite sands, limestone, clay and kaolin, and uranium deposits were discovered in coastal areas in 1980. Export earnings from gemstones rose from US $1.5m. in 1972 to an estimated US $30.6m. in 1983. Inshore and offshore petroleum exploration, begun in 1975, has not been successful, but contracts were signed with a group of international oil companies in 1980 to resume the search for offshore petroleum deposits. In 1983 about 30% of Sri Lanka's export earnings were spent on petroleum imports.

The public sector industries, which include cement, textiles, petroleum refining and fertilizers, are undertaken by state-sponsored corporations, and supply primarily the domestic market. Manufacturing output increased, in real terms, by about 6.3% per year in 1978–83, and the value of Sri Lanka's exports of manufactures (excluding petroleum products) increased seven-fold, from SDR 31m. to SDR 244m., between 1977 and 1983. However, the manufacturing sector accounted for only 15.7% of GDP in 1983. Sri Lanka's principal trading partners in 1983 were Japan, the USA and Iran.

Foreign aid for development projects has come from Middle East countries, Japan, the Netherlands, the USSR, the Federal Republic of Germany, the USA, the Democratic People's Republic of Korea and Yugoslavia. According to government figures, Sri Lanka receives the highest level of foreign aid per head of population in the world, with total aid of $580m. in 1984/85. In 1982 acording to estimates by the World Bank, Sri Lanka's gross national product (GNP) per head was US $320 (at average 1980–82 prices), which was among the 30 lowest in the world.

Sri Lanka receives large remittances (an estimated Rs 6,000m. in 1982) from emigrant workers in the Middle East. Unemployment, which affected 13.5% of the labour force in 1980–81, and inflation are the country's main economic problems. GDP grew by 4.5% in 1984, compared with 4.9% in 1983 and 5.8% in 1982. The fall in growth was largely because import prices rose faster than exports. The annual rate of inflation reached 31% in 1980, fell to around 15% in 1982 and 1983, and rose to around 20% in 1984. Huge increases in investment spending by government ministries led to a doubling of the total budget deficit to more than 21% of GDP in 1980. After the IMF temporarily suspended disbursement of a $335m. loan, drastic cuts in government spending were imposed in the 1981, 1982 and 1983 budgets, and it was agreed that no new projects would be sanctioned. Sri Lanka's trade deficit was Rs 18,898.6m. in 1983, compared with Rs 17,998.9m. in 1982. However, export earnings were only 55% of import costs.

The total budget deficit fell to 13% of GDP in 1983, and to an estimated 10% in 1984, but government expenditure was still about twice as much as revenue. Foreign aid accounted for around 60% of government expenditure, which led to an increasingly high level of foreign borrowing. The cost of debt servicing was equivalent to 22% of exports of goods and services in 1983, but the ratio fell to 16% in 1984. The disbursed outstanding debt was around $3,000m. in December 1984. The economy was assisted by booming tea prices in 1984, a result largely of the Indian Government's ban on exports of certain grades of tea, which enabled Sri Lanka to record a balance-of-payments surplus of more than $220m., the highest in more than 20 years, and to avoid seeking another stand-by loan from the IMF. The Government forecast a surplus of Rs 1,700m. for the 1985 budget, which provided incentives to boost exports, more protection for efficient local industries and some personal tax relief.

In June 1984 the Government announced the 1984–89 Development Plan, envisaging a total outlay of Rs 202,000m., of which Rs 106,000m. will be spent on public sector investment and Rs 96,000m. on private sector investment. Average annual growth in GDP of 5.5% was forecast for the period.

An Investment Promotion Zone (IPZ) covering 500 acres has been established north of Colombo, attracting much-needed foreign capital and creating employment. Gross export earnings from the IPZ amounted to Rs 2,420m. in 1983. However, the prolonged civil disturbances in 1983 and 1984 caused foreign earnings to fall from Rs 7,500m. in 1983 to Rs 3,000m. in 1984.

Transport and Communications

Central Sri Lanka is hilly and thickly wooded, but good road and rail links make most parts of the island accessible. The railways, with more than 1,500 km of track, are state-owned. Air Lanka provides domestic and international flights. The port of Colombo is one of the most important in the Far East, and container facilities are being installed with Japanese aid.

Social Welfare

There is an island network of hospitals, clinics and dispensaries, where treatment is free. There were 469 hospitals in 1978, with 41,513 beds. In 1980 there were 2,055 physicians registered with the Department of Health. Unemployment benefits were introduced in 1977.

Education

Education is officially compulsory for 10 years between five and 15 years of age, and it is free from lower kindergarten to university age. There are three types of school: state-controlled schools (mostly co-educational), denominational schools and Pirivenas (for Buddhist clergy and lay students). Primary education begins at the age of five and lasts for six years. Secondary education, beginning at 11 years of age, lasts for up to seven years. In 1983 the total enrolment at primary and secondary schools was equivalent to 76% of the school-age population. There are also 26 teacher-training colleges, six universities and two university colleges. Since 1977 there has been increased emphasis on informal education programmes for school leavers and special education programmes. There are also 13 polytechnic institutes, eight junior technical colleges and an open university. Adult illiteracy declined from 24.5% in 1963 to 14.0% (males 9.2%; females 18.8%) in 1981.

Tourism

As a stopping place for luxury cruises and by virtue of the spectacle of its Buddhist festivals, ancient monuments and natural scenery, Sri Lanka is one of Asia's most important tourist centres. Good motor roads connect Colombo to the main places of interest.

In 1982 there were an estimated 407,230 visitors to Sri Lanka, and earnings from tourism amounted to Rs 3,050m. In 1983 tourists arrivals fell by an estimated 17%, to 337,342, while earnings from tourism dropped to Rs 2,560.4m., as a result of the outbreak of intercommunal violence. Tourists arrivals were estimated to have fallen a further 40% in 1984.

Public Holidays

1985: 1 May (May Day), 4 May (Wesak Full Moon holiday), 22 May (National Heroes' Day), 2 June (Poson Poya Day), 20 June (Ramazan Festival Day), 30 June (special Bank Holiday), 1 July (Esala Poya Day), 31 July (Nikini Poya Day), 27 August (Hadji Festival Day), 29 August (Nikini Poya Day), 28 September (Binara Poya Day), 28 October (Vap Poya Day), 11 November (Deepavali), 25 November (Milad-un-Nabi, Birth of the Prophet), 27 November (Poya Day), 25 December (Christmas), 26 December (Poya Day), 31 December (special Bank Holiday).

1986: January (Tamil Thai Pongal Day, Durutu Poya Day), February (Navam Poya Day), 4 February (Independence Commemoration Day, Maha Sivaratri), March (Medin Poya Day), 28 March (Good Friday), April (Sinhala and Tamil New Year, Bak Poya Day).

There is a holiday every lunar month on the day of the full moon.

Note: A number of Hindu, Muslim and Buddhist holidays depend on lunar sightings.

Weights and Measures

Legislation in November 1974 provided for the introduction of the metric system but imperial units are still used for some purposes.

The Constitution

The Constitution of the Democratic Socialist Republic of Sri Lanka was approved by the National State Assembly (renamed Parliament) on 17 August 1978, and promulgated on 7 September 1978. The following is a summary of its main provisions.

FUNDAMENTAL RIGHTS

The Constitution guarantees the fundamental rights and freedoms of all citizens, including freedom of thought, conscience and worship and equal entitlement before the law.

THE PRESIDENT

The President is Head of State. He exercises all executive powers including defence of the Republic. He is directly elected by the people for a term of six years, and is eligible for re-election. The President's powers include the right to:

(a) choose to hold any portfolio in the Cabinet;
(b) appoint or dismiss the Prime Minister or any other minister;
(c) preside at ceremonial sittings of Parliament;
(d) dismiss Parliament at will;
(e) submit to a national referendum any Bill or matter of national importance which has been rejected by Parliament.

LEGISLATURE

The Parliament is the legislative power of the people. It consists of such number of representatives of the people as a Delimitation Commission shall determine. The members of Parliament are directly elected by a system of modified proportional representation. By-elections are abolished, successors to members of Parliament being appointed by the head of the party which nominated the outgoing member at the previous election. Parliament exercises the judicial power of the people through courts, tribunals and institutions created and established or recognized by the Constitution or established by law. Parliament has control over public finance.

OTHER PROVISIONS

Religion

Buddhism has the foremost place among religions and it is the duty of the State to protect and foster Buddhism, while assuring every citizen the freedom to adopt the religion of their choice.

Language

The Constitution recognizes two national languages, Sinhala and Tamil. Sinhala remains the official language and all laws must be made or enacted in this language. Either of the national languages may be used by all citizens in transactions with government institutions.

Amendments

to the Constitution require a two-thirds majority in Parliament. In February 1979 the Constitution was amended by allowing members of Parliament who resigned or were expelled from their party to retain their seats, in certain circumstances. In January 1981 Parliament amended the Constitution to increase its membership from 168 to 169. An amendment enabling the President to seek re-election after four years was passed in August 1982. In February 1983 an amendment providing for by-elections to fill vacant seats in Parliament was passed. An amendment banning parties that advocate separatism was approved by Parliament in August 1983.

Judicial System

The judicial system consists of the Supreme Court, the Court of Appeal, the High Court, District Courts, Magistrates' Courts and Primary Courts. The last four are Courts of the First Instance and appeals lie from them to the Court of Appeal and from there, on a question of law, to the Supreme Court. Appeals also lie from the Court of Appeal if special leave is granted by the Supreme Court. The High Court deals with all criminal cases and the District Courts with civil cases. There are also Labour Tribunals to decide labour disputes.

The Judicial Service Commission consists of the Chief Justice and two judges of the Supreme Court, nominated by the President. All judges of the Courts of First Instance (except High Court Judges) and the staff of all courts are appointed and controlled by the Judicial Service Commission. The Supreme Court consists of the Chief Justice and not fewer than six and not more than 10 other judges. The Court of Appeal consists of the President and not fewer than six and not more than 11 other judges.

Chief Justice: NEVILLE SUPPIAH SHARVANANDA.

SUDAN

Introductory Survey

Location, Climate, Language, Religion, Flag, Capital

The Democratic Republic of Sudan lies in north-eastern Africa. It is bordered by Egypt to the north, by the Red Sea and Ethiopia to the east, by the Central African Republic, Chad and Libya to the west, and by Kenya, Uganda and Zaire to the south. The climate shows a marked transition from the desert of the north to the rainy equatorial south. Temperatures vary with altitude and latitude. The annual average for the whole country is about 21°C (70°F). Arabic is the official language, although other languages are spoken and English is widely understood. Most northern Sudanese are Muslims, while in the south most of the inhabitants are animists or Christians. The national flag (proportions 2 by 1) has three equal horizontal stripes, of red, white and black, with a green triangle at the hoist. The capital is Khartoum.

Recent History

The Sudan (as the country was known before 1975) was ruled as an Anglo-Egyptian condominium from 1899 until achieving independence as a parliamentary republic on 1 January 1956. After a military coup in November 1958, the army took control of the state. A Supreme Council of the Armed Forces was set up and ruled until October 1964, when it was overthrown in a civilian revolution. The governments that followed failed to improve the economic situation or to deal with the problem of the insurgent southern provinces, and in May 1969 power was seized by a group of officers led by Col Gaafar Mohammed Nimeri, who assumed the rank of major-general. All existing political institutions and organizations were abolished, and the 'Democratic Republic of the Sudan' was proclaimed, with supreme authority in the hands of the Revolutionary Command Council (RCC). In November 1970 the Presidents of Egypt and Libya and President Nimeri agreed in principle to political union between their countries, but internal opposition prevented Sudanese participation in the Federation of Arab Republics which was formed in January 1972, with Syria as the third member. In October 1971 a referendum confirmed Gen. Nimeri's nomination as President. A new Government was formed, the RCC was dissolved, and the Sudanese Socialist Union (SSU) was recognized as the only political party.

Since first coming to power, the Nimeri Government had made attempts to settle the problem of the three southern provinces (Bahr el Ghazal, Equatoria and Upper Nile), whose inhabitants are racially and culturally different from most of the country's population. Rebellion against rule from the north had first broken out in 1955, and fighting continued until March 1972, when an agreement to give the three provinces a certain degree of autonomy was concluded in Addis Ababa, the capital of neighbouring Ethiopia, between members of the Sudan Government and representatives of the South Sudan Liberation Movement. A permanent Executive Council for the southern region was established in April 1972, and Sudan's permanent constitution was endorsed in April 1973. Elections to the Regional People's Assembly for Southern Sudan took place in November 1973, followed by elections to the National People's Assembly in April 1974.

The establishment of a National Assembly and a political party broadened the Government's base of power, though the army continued to play an important role in the country's affairs. During 1977 a policy of reconciliation was initiated, which brought several of Nimeri's former opponents into the administration. Regional and national elections were held in February 1978, with the provision that opposition candidates must be approved by the SSU. About one-half of the 274 elective seats in the National Assembly were won by SSU candidates. In May 1979, on the 10th anniversary of his accession to power, President Nimeri assumed the rank of field marshal. In February 1980 Sudan was reorganized into six regions, each with a certain measure of autonomy. Elections were held in May for the National and Regional Assemblies. In October the Council of Ministers approved legislative proposals to legalize a regional system of government.

The National People's Assembly was again dissolved in October 1981. When new elections were held in December, its membership had been reduced from 366 to 151, as many powers had been devolved to the new regions. At the same time, the High Executive Council (HEC) for Southern Sudan was dismissed. Also in December, 21 former regional ministers were arrested for allegedly forming an illegal political party. The entire Sudanese Government was dismissed in November, although many individuals were later reinstated.

In February 1982 President Nimeri cancelled the contentious referendum on redivision of the southern region, and in April elections for a new Southern Region People's Assembly took place. All candidates were SSU-approved, but were divided on the issue of redivision of the southern provinces. Joseph Lagu, a former President of the HEC, was appointed Vice-President of Sudan in July.

In April 1983 President Nimeri was re-elected for a third six-year term. During 1983 Sudan's internal conflict worsened significantly: in March Nimeri was forced to move additional northern troops to the southern provinces to combat violence and military unrest, and in May troops mutinied at Bor, while thousands were reported to have deserted to join rebel groups, who had re-emerged with frequent attacks on military and economic targets. In June Nimeri finally decided to redivide the south into three smaller regions, each with its own assembly, in an effort to quell the unrest, but many saw this as an attempt to 'divide and rule'. In September a second presidential decree also proved controversial: Nimeri suddenly announced the imposition of strict Islamic law (the Sharia) to replace the existing civil penal code. The new system included the banning of alcohol and the release of all prisoners who had been sentenced under the old laws. These measures provoked anger in the largely non-Muslim south, where redivision was seen as a clear betrayal of the 1972 Addis Ababa Agreement, while in the north discontent was reflected in a wave of strikes by workers in the public sector. In April 1984 President Nimeri finally proclaimed an indefinite state of emergency, banning all public meetings and demonstrations, to combat 'spreading corruption' and internal opposition. Special emergency ('decisive justice') courts were set up, and the army and police were given sweeping powers to search mail, to impose curfews and to detain suspects without trial. The stringent application of the Sharia law (apparently as an excuse to suppress political dissent), with the resulting harsh punishments, aggravated tensions within the country and strained relations between Sudan and its allies, Egypt and the USA. In January 1985 the execution for 'heresy' of 76-year-old Mahmoud Mohamed Taha, the moderate leader of the outlawed Republican Brothers movement, provoked international protest. In March up to 200 members of the conservative Muslim Brotherhood, including numerous high-ranking officials, were detained.

During 1984 Nimeri reshuffled his Council of Ministers twice, and in May replaced it with a 64-member Presidential Council, in line with the 'Shoura' (consultation) principle of the Sharia. The President's Islamization plans suffered a setback in July, when the National People's Assembly rejected his proposed constitutional amendments to make Sudan a formal Islamic state. There were fears that Nimeri might, none the less, force through the amendments by presidential decree. In October, however, he adopted a more conciliatory approach: the state of emergency was lifted, and the special courts suspended, and the President offered to revoke the redivision of the south if a majority of southerners desired it. The situation in the south continued to deteriorate, however, with the emergence of the Sudan People's Liberation Movement (SPLM), whose policy of attacking foreign installations in the south forced the suspension of all major development projects. By March 1985 the SPLM reportedly controlled large areas of the provinces of Bahr el Ghazal and Upper Nile. In an effort to make peace, Nimeri established a 30-member committee, chaired by a non-partisan figure and empowered to negotiate with the rebels. Meanwhile, in Khartoum, public discontent, provoked largely by rises in the price of food, culminated in late March 1985 in a general strike, and on 6 April, while Nimeri was visiting the USA, he was deposed in a bloodless military coup. The country's new leader, Gen. Abdel-Rahman Swar al-Dahab (who had recently been made Minister of Defence and Commander-in-Chief of the Army by Nimeri), appointed a transitional military council, and held negotiations with various groups who had opposed the ex-President, in an attempt to establish a new civilian administration. (For further details, see Late Information.)

In addition to the consequences of internal rebellion and economic crisis, Sudan faces the problems of drought and famine; in January 1985 UN figures suggested that 4.5m. Sudanese were 'famine-affected', and the problem was compounded by the overwhelming number of refugees in the country (1,001,000 in December 1984), mainly from Ethiopia and Chad. The outlook for 1985 was even bleaker, as a huge deficit in food requirements was forecast by international relief agencies.

Sudan has expanded links with various African, Arab and European countries, as well as with the USA (from which Sudan receives military aid) and the People's Republic of China. Following an unsuccessful coup attempt in July 1976, Sudan severed diplomatic relations with Libya and established a mutual defence pact with Egypt. Relations with Ethiopia deteriorated early in 1977, following allegations that Sudan was aiding Eritrean secessionists in Ethiopia, although the countries were later reconciled. Sudan closed the border with Ethiopia to Eritrean rebels in 1980, when there were an estimated 440,000 refugees in Sudan, principally from the Eritrean conflict but also from Uganda. Diplomatic relations with Libya were restored in February 1978 but became strained in 1981 during Libya's occupation of Chad, and President Nimeri frequently accused Libya of supporting plots against him.

President Nimeri was one of very few Arab leaders to support President Sadat of Egypt's initiative for peace with Israel in 1978. Sudan's close relations with Egypt were consolidated in October 1982, when a 'charter of integration', providing for closer collaboration in foreign, security, social and economic affairs, was signed. The first session of the joint 'Nile Valley Parliament', created by the charter, was convened in May 1983 with 60 Sudanese and 60 Egyptian members.

Government

Prior to the 1985 coup, executive power was vested in the President, nominated by the Sudanese Socialist Union (SSU), the only recognized political organization. The President governed with the assistance of an appointed 64-member Presidential Council, which was responsible for advising the President on all aspects of economic, financial, political and social affairs. The Council included the Chief Justice, the Speaker of the National People's Assembly, 26 Ministers and Ministers of State, 10 presidential advisers and eight regional governors. Legislative power was vested in the unicameral National People's Assembly, with 151 members: 68 elected for four years by universal adult suffrage; 70 indirectly-elected representatives of farmers, industrial workers, intellectuals and the armed forces; and 13 appointed by the President. All members of the Assembly had to either belong to or be approved by the SSU. Sudan comprised eight regions, each with its own regional government and People's Assembly. In April 1985 the transitional military council announced proposals to draft a new constitution.

Defence

In July 1984 the armed forces totalled 58,000 men: army 53,000, navy 2,000, air force 3,000. Paramilitary forces totalled 3,500. Defence expenditure for 1983 was estimated at £S300m. Sudan has a defence agreement with Egypt and receives military aid from the USA. A military co-operation agreement was signed with the People's Republic of China in January 1982. Military service is by conscription.

Economic Affairs

After the 1969 revolution, the economy became increasingly nationalized, although the Nimeri Government was forced to change its policy to attract private investment from overseas. Of Sudan's estimated 80m. ha (200m. acres) of arable land, only about 5.5m. ha (14m. acres) are cultivated, but nearly 80% of the working population are engaged in agriculture. In 1980 agriculture contributed about 40% of Sudan's gross domestic product and provided more than 90% of total export earnings. The principal food crops are sorghum (the staple food), cassava and millet, although Sudan aimed for self-sufficiency in coffee, tobacco, rice, wheat and sugar by the mid-1980s. The major export crop is usually cotton, grown under irrigation, but in 1980/81, the worst season on record, it was surpassed by groundnuts. Cotton production recovered by 55% in 1981/82, however, and showed further improvement in 1982/83 and 1983/84, with the output of lint reaching 920,000 bales and a record 1.2m. bales (each of 370 lb or 168 kg) respectively, following the expansion of various rehabilitation schemes. Other important export crops are oil-seeds, mainly sesame seed. Sudan's vast forest areas provide timber and about 80% of the world's gum arabic. Production of cotton declined during the early 1970s, and wheat was introduced in an attempt to diversify the economy. However, Sudan, prompted by the IMF, reversed this policy in mid-1979, placing renewed emphasis on cotton and other cash crops in an attempt to earn much-needed foreign currency. More than one-quarter of the Gezira scheme, established in the 1920s and covering 2.3m. acres in the area between the Blue and White Niles, is cultivated for cotton, while the remainder produces sorghum (durra), wheat, groundnuts, rice, pulses and vegetables. In December 1977 the Rahad project, designed to irrigate 820,000 acres and to grow medium-staple cotton and groundnuts, came into production. In 1983–84 agricultural production in Sudan was severely affected by drought; the sorghum crop had reportedly failed in many areas, and imports of food were expected to escalate as a result.

Iron ore, manganese, magnesite, gold, silver, chromium ore, gypsum, mica, zinc, tungsten and copper are among Sudan's known minerals, although exploitation of them has been limited by access difficulties and lack of funds. Sudan and Saudi Arabia are co-operating in a scheme to mine zinc, silver and copper on the Red Sea bed, and in 1984 it was announced that high-grade deposits of gold had been discovered in the Red Sea Hills. Reserves of gold were estimated at 150,000 metric tons. Petroleum has been discovered in commercial quantities in south-western Sudan, and this, with an ultimate potential capacity of 190,000 barrels per day and potential annual revenue of $136m., provides the country's main hope of overcoming its chronic balance-of-payments difficulties. However, Sudan's hopes of becoming an oil exporter by 1986 were dashed when the US companies working on the oilfields suspended all operations in 1984, as attacks by rebel groups on foreign installations increased.

Industry is mostly agriculturally-based, and about 60% of production is constituted by textiles, flour, vegetable oil, sugar and footwear. The combined sugar cane production and refinery estate at Kenana produced more than 300,000 metric tons of raw sugar in 1983 and has a potential annual capacity of 330,000 tons, thus enabling sugar imports, hitherto a major drain on foreign exchange (together with petroleum imports), to be significantly reduced. In 1984 the World Bank lent $60m. for the rehabilitation of the sugar industry, boosting hopes of increased yields and production. There are plans for additional sugar refineries and paper mills, among other large industrial projects. There are two cement works, producing 169,400 metric tons in 1981/82, and a third is planned. The construction of a fertilizer factory south of Khartoum is now complete.

Transport problems are a severe hindrance to development but the Port Sudan–Khartoum oil products pipeline was completed in December 1977, reducing dependence on rail distribution. There are hydroelectric power stations at Roseires and Sennar, and a thermal power station at Burri. Egypt is co-operating with Sudan in constructing the 360-km Jonglei Canal project, to increase the flow of water in the White Nile, to shorten the river from north to south, and to aid Southern Sudan through the reclamation of 3.7m. acres of potential agricultural land. However, work on the canal was halted in 1984 as the security situation in the south deteriorated.

Sudan's plans for development suffer from an acute shortage of finance, both external and internal. Major projects, such as the development of a new airport and a new seaport, have been deferred in order to concentrate resources on agricultural improvements. Stringent economic reforms, including a devaluation of the Sudanese pound and abolition of the dual exchange rate which had favoured the import of vital commodities, and the reduction of subsidies on fuel, wheat and sugar, were introduced in 1981 in response to IMF directives. By 1983–84 some signs of progress were in evidence, with a slight improvement in the balance of payments position: export revenues increased by 28%, to US $732m., while imports declined by 8%, to $1,300m. The inflation rate also fell slightly, from around 30% to 25%. Sudan rescheduled $300m. of official debt repayments that were due in 1984, and in April 1984 the IMF approved a stand-by arrangement of SDR 90m., but debt problems remain serious. Sudan's arrears to the IMF amounted to around $110m., and the total foreign debt was estimated at $9,000m. by February 1985. The Sudanese pound was devalued by 48% in February 1985.

The imposition of Sharia law in September 1983 had serious repercussions on the economy; the 1984 Civil Transactions Act was designed to bring existing company, investment and taxation law into line with Islamic principles. In 1984 the first Islamic budget, like previous budgets, placed emphasis on agriculture, energy and transport, with priority given to rehabilitating existing projects, but, under the new zakat (alms) system, 20 taxes were abolished, while the official ban on alcohol removed a major source of revenue. Sudan's already overwhelming financial problems were compounded by the effects of drought and famine in 1983–84; huge numbers of refugees, mainly from Ethiopia, added to the strain on the Sudanese economy, and in November 1984 the Government appealed for 160,000 tons of emergency food aid, as it seemed probable that the disaster in Sudan might become comparable to that in neighbouring Ethiopia.

Transport and Communications

There are 5,500 km of railways, all owned by the state. Most of Sudan's roads are only cleared tracks which are impassable immediately after rain, and in the northern part of the country most of the roads are closed between July and September. Highways from the capital and Port Sudan to the provinces are under construction, and plans have been drawn up for a network of highways in southern and western Sudan. The expansion of paved roads, including the 1,179-km highway from Port Sudan to Khartoum (opened in October 1980), has led to a 20% increase in road transport, while the road from Juba to Kitale in Kenya, opened in 1976, provides access to the port of Mombasa. The second phase of a US $74m. project to improve berthing and cargo-handling services at Port Sudan began in February 1983. Sudan Railways operate passenger and freight steamer services on navigable reaches of the River Nile. These are linked to the railway services of Egypt, Uganda and Kenya. Sudan Airways maintains internal and external services. In November 1974 the Umm Haraz earth satellite station was completed, and this has given Sudan vastly improved international communication links. New relay broadcasting stations have been built at Omdurman and Juba.

Social Welfare

The Ministry of Health organizes the public health services. In 1981 there were 158 hospitals with 17,205 beds, 220 health centres, 887 dispensaries, 1,619 dressing stations and 1,095 primary health care units. Medical personnel included 2,122 physicians and 12,871 nurses. A social insurance agreement with Egypt was signed in September 1975.

Education

The Government provides free elementary education from the ages of seven to 12 years, intermediate from 13 to 15 and secondary from 16 to 18. It was hoped to reduce the 1975 illiteracy rate of 80% to 50% by the early 1980s, and by 1991 it was hoped to achieve universal primary school enrolment and universal literacy. In 1981 the total enrolment at primary schools was equivalent to 52% of children in the appropriate age-group (61% of boys; 43% of girls). The comparable enrolment ratio in intermediate and secondary schools was 18% (20% of boys; 15% of girls). Pupils from secondary schools are accepted at the University of Khartoum, subject to their reaching the necessary standards. Cairo University also has a Khartoum branch, and there is an Islamic university at Omdurman. New universities were opened at Juba and Wadi Medani in 1977.

Tourism

The rain forests in the south teem with wild game, and attract hunters and observers from all over the world. In the north are the sites of several temples and pyramids of ancient Sudanese civilizations. There is a national park at Dinder. Foreign tourist arrivals totalled 26,714 in 1977.

Public Holidays

1985: 25 May (Anniversary of the Revolution), 20 June* (Id ul Fitr, end of Ramadan), 1 July (Decentralization Day), 27 August* (Id ul Adha, Feast of the Sacrifice), 16 September* (Islamic New Year), 25 November* (Mouloud, Birth of the Prophet), 25 December (Christmas).

1986: 1 January (Independence Day), 3 March (Unity Day), 27 April (Sham el Nassim).

* The dates of Islamic holidays are determined by sightings of the moon, and may be slightly different from those given above.

Weights and Measures

The metric system is gradually replacing traditional weights and measures.

Currency and Exchange Rates

1,000 millièmes = 100 piastres = 1 Sudanese pound (£S).

Exchange rates (31 December 1984):
£1 sterling = £S1.507;
US $1 = £S1.300.

* The 18 provinces are grouped into administrative regions. In February 1980 Sudan was reorganized into six regions in preparation for increased local self-government. They were: Central Region, Northern Region, Eastern Region, Kordofan Region, Darfur Region and the existing Southern Region. In June 1983 the Southern Region was further divided into Bahr El Ghazal Region, Equatoria Region and Upper Nile Region. In June 1984 a new province, Wahdah, was created in the Upper Nile Region. Khartoum is administered separately as the national capital.

Directory

Note: Following the coup of 6 April 1985, the Constitution, the Presidential Council and the National and Regional People's Assemblies were all suspended. (For further details, see Late Information.)

The Constitution

A new Constitution for the Democratic Republic of Sudan was approved by the People's Assembly in April 1973. It came into force on 8 May 1973. The main provisions of the Constitution are summarized below:

THE PRESIDENT

The President must be a Sudanese of at least 35 years of age. Nominated by the Sudanese Socialist Union, the President is Head of State, is responsible for maintaining the Constitution and may appoint Vice-Presidents, a Prime Minister and Ministers. The President is the Supreme Commander of the People's Armed Forces and Security Forces, and the Supreme Head of the Public Service.

If satisfied that a national crisis exists, the President may declare a state of emergency, which may entail the suspension of any or all freedoms and rights under the Permanent Constitution other than that of resort to the courts. In the event of the President's death, the First Vice-President will temporarily assume office for a period not exceeding 60 days. Following the abortive coup of September 1975, a constitutional amendment was introduced which empowers the President to take any 'suitable' measures.

THE PEOPLE'S ASSEMBLY

The duration of a sitting is four years and sittings are held in public. A quorum consists of half the number of members. Amendments to the Constitution may be proposed by the President or one-third of the membership of the People's Assembly, and to be passed must have a two-thirds majority in the Assembly and the assent of the President. The National People's Assembly had 151 seats after the December 1981 elections. There are 68 members elected for four years by universal adult suffrage, 70 members nominated by workers and other groups and 13 appointed by the President.

JUDICIARY

The State is subject to the rule of law which is the basis of government. The judiciary is an independent body directly responsible to the President and judges are appointed by the President.

RELIGION

Unrestricted freedom of religion is allowed and mention is specifically made of the Islamic and Christian religions.

NATIONAL PEOPLE'S ASSEMBLY

The National People's Assembly had 151 members: 68 elected for four years by universal adult suffrage; 70 representatives of peasant, worker, military and professional groups; and 13 appointed by the President. The Assembly was opened in May 1974 and dissolved in April 1985. In the elections of December 1981 only candidates approved by the SSU were allowed to stand.

Speaker: Izzedin as-Sayyid.

Leader: Abulgasim Hashim.

REGIONAL PEOPLE'S ASSEMBLIES

The country was divided into eight administrative regions, each with its own governor and People's Assembly. The Southern Region was formerly administered by the High Executive Council (HEC) for the Southern Region, which had opened after the Addis Ababa Agreement in 1973. The HEC was abolished in June 1983 by presidential decree, bringing legislature in the south into line with that of the other regions. Three separate People's Assemblies were thus established in the South, as a provisional arrangement pending a permanent disposition of the South.

Political Organizations

Sudanese Socialist Union (SSU): POB 1850, Khartoum; tel. 74280; f. 1972; fmrly only recognized political organization; abolished in April 1985; all senior party committees were suspended in January 1982 and a working party, chaired by President Nimeri, was set up. At the fourth SSU Congress, in March 1983, Nimeri was unanimously re-elected as president of the SSU, and appointed a new central leadership committee. The post of secretary-general was abolished and its powers transferred to the first secretary; Pres. Field Marshal Gaafar Mohammed Nimeri; First Sec. Mohamed Abdel Qader Omer.

Illegal opposition movements included the Sudan People's Liberation Movement (SPLM, Leaders Joseph Adohu, Col John Garang) and its military wing, the Sudan People's Liberation Army (SPLA), and the Liberation Front for Southern Sudan.

Judicial System

Until September 1983 the judicial system was divided into two sections, civil and Islamic, the latter dealing only with personal and family matters. In September 1983 President Nimeri announced a 'comprehensive revolution of the judiciary' which revoked all existing laws in favour of a new penal code 'linked organically and spiritually with Islamic law'. A new system of Islamic (Sharia) law was established. Under the provisions of the new penal code, alcohol and gambling were prohibited, while imprisonment was largely replaced by the death sentence or amputation. Crimes of murder and related offences were judged in accordance with the Koran. The status of Islamic law after the April 1985 coup was unclear.

Religion

The majority of the northern Sudanese population are followers of Islam, while in the south the population is mostly either animist or Christian. It is estimated that there are more than 500,000 Roman and Eastern Rite Catholics.

ISLAM

Islam is the State religion. Sudanese Islam has a strong Sufi element, and is estimated to have more than 15m. adherants.

Transport

RAILWAYS

The total length of railway in operation in 1983 was 5,500 route-km. The main line runs from Wadi Halfa, on the Egyptian border, to El Obeid, via Khartoum. Lines from Atbara and Sinnar connect with Port Sudan. There are lines from Sinnar to Damazine on the Blue Nile (227 km) and from Aradeiba to Nyala in the south-western province of Darfur (689 km), with a 445 km branch line from Babanousa to Wau in Bahr el Ghazal province.

Sudan Railways Corporation: POB 65, Atbara; tel. 2000; telex 40001; f. 1897; Gen. Man. Mohamed el-Hassan Osman.

ROADS

Roads in Northern Sudan, other than town roads, are only cleared tracks and often impassable immediately after rain. Motor traffic on roads in the former Upper Nile province is limited to the drier months of January–May. There are several good gravelled roads in Equatoria and Bahr el Ghazal provinces which are passable all the year, but in these districts some of the minor roads become impassable after rain. Rehabilitation of communications in Southern Sudan is a major priority as the civil war completely destroyed 1,600 km of roads and 70 bridges.

The Wadi Medani to Gedaref highway, financed by a loan from the People's Republic of China, was completed in March 1977 and a road linking Wadi Medani–Sennar–Kosti was due to be completed in 1984, together with several roads linking major towns in the west. Over 48,000 km of tracks are classed as 'motorable', but only 2,000 km were asphalt in 1980. A 1,190-km tarmac road linking the capital with Port Sudan was completed during 1980. A 582-km road connecting the Southern Region with Kenya was reported to be well advanced in 1983, but problems in the south caused work to be suspended in early 1984.

Public Corporation for Roads and Bridges: POB 756, Khartoum; tel. 70794; f. 1976; Chair. Abdel Rahman Haboud; Dir-Gen. Abdu Mohammed Abdu.

INLAND WATERWAYS

The total length of navigable waterways served by passenger and freight services is 4,068 km, of which approximately 1,723 km is open all year. From the Egyptian border to Wadi Halfa and Khartoum navigation is limited by cataracts to short stretches but the White Nile from Khartoum to Juba is navigable in almost all seasons.

River Transport Corporation (RTC): POB 284, North Khartoum; operates 2,500 route-km of steamers on the Nile; Chair. Ali Amir Taha.

SURINAME

Introductory Survey

Location, Climate, Language, Religion, Flag, Capital

The Republic of Suriname lies on the north-east coast of South America. It is bordered by Guyana to the west, by French Guiana to the east, and by Brazil to the south. The climate is sub-tropical, with fairly heavy rainfall and average temperatures of between 21°C (70°F) and 30°C (86°F). The official language is Dutch (spoken by 37% of the population in 1964). The other main languages are Hindustani (32%) and Javanese (15%). The majority of the people can speak the native language Sranang Tongo (taki-taki), while Chinese, English, French and Spanish are also used. The principal religions are Christianity (professed by 45% of the population in 1964), Hinduism (28%) and Islam (20%). The national flag (proportions 3 by 2) has five horizontal stripes: a broad central band of red (with a five-pointed yellow star in the centre), edged with white, between bands of green. The capital is Paramaribo.

Recent History

Settlers from England landed in Suriname in the 1630s, and the territory was alternately an English and a Dutch colony until it was eventually awarded to the Netherlands by the Treaty of Vienna in 1815. Under a Charter signed in December 1954, Suriname (also known as Dutch Guiana) became an equal partner in the Kingdom of the Netherlands, with the Netherlands Antilles and the Netherlands itself, and gained full autonomy in domestic affairs.

The Hindustani-dominated Government, in power since 1969 and led by Dr Jules Sedney, resigned in February 1973. General elections in November 1973 were won by an alliance of parties which favoured complete independence from the Netherlands, and in December Henck Arron, leader of the Nationale Partij Suriname (a predominantly Creole party), became Prime Minister. In May 1975 it was agreed that Suriname would become independent on 25 November, and that the Dutch Government would give 3,500m. guilders in aid. Independence was achieved, as planned, but it brought about the emigration of some 40,000 Surinamese to the Netherlands, resulting in a lack of skilled workers, and border disputes with French Guiana and Guyana. The general elections of October 1977 resulted in a clear majority for the ruling Nationale Partij Kombinatie, and Henck Arron continued as Prime Minister.

The Government of Henck Arron was overthrown in February 1980 by a group of soldiers, who formed an eight-man military council (Nationale Militaire Raad—NMR). President Ferrier refused to agree to the retention of supreme power by this council, and in March he appointed a civilian administration led by Dr Henk Chin A Sen, a former leader of the Partij Nationalistische Republiek. In August the Army Chief of Staff, NMR member Sgt-Maj. (later Lt-Col) Desi Bouterse, staged a coup. President Ferrier was replaced by Dr Chin A Sen. The legislature was dissolved, and a state of emergency declared. An unsuccessful Hindustani-inspired coup against Lt-Col Bouterse, led by Sgt-Maj. Wilfred Hawker, was staged in March 1981. In September the President announced details of a draft constitution, which sought to limit the army to a supervisory role in government. This move, however, was countered by the army with the formation of the Revolutionary People's Front, a comprehensive civilian political alliance headed by the three army chiefs, Lt-Col Bouterse, Maj. Roy Horb and Lt Iwan Graanoogst. In February 1982 the NMR, led by Lt-Col Bouterse, seized power from Dr Chin A Sen and his civilian Government. The Vice-President of the Supreme Court, L. Fred Ramdat Misier, was appointed interim President. In March a further coup attempt by Sgt-Maj. Hawker failed, and he was executed.

A state of siege was declared, and martial law was imposed. In order to prevent the Netherlands from suspending its aid, a 12-member Council of Ministers with a civilian majority, and a moderate economist, Henry Neyhorst, as Prime Minister, was appointed at the end of March, although Lt-Col Bouterse remained effectively in control. Initially, Lt-Col Bouterse had the support of left-wing groups and the trade unions. When, however, the promised social and economic changes failed to materialize in a deteriorating economic climate, the unions joined the business community in its call for a return to constitutional rule. The military regime responded by tightening censorship and by attempting to suppress the opposition. In October the arrest of Cyril Daal, the leader of Suriname's principal trade union (De Moederbond), prompted strikes and demonstrations. Faced with a general strike in November, Lt-Col Bouterse agreed to arrange for the election of a constituent assembly to draft a new constitution by March 1983, to be followed by the establishment of an elected government, but he subsequently broke his commitment. In December 1982 members of the armed forces burned down several buildings used by the opposition, including the headquarters of De Moederbond. During the ensuing disturbances, 15 leading citizens, including Cyril Daal, were executed. The borders were closed, and all schools, universities and private sources of information were shut down. The Government resigned, the Netherlands and the USA halted all aid, and the country was placed under rule by decree. A temporary, largely military, government was appointed. An attempted coup in January 1983, the sixth since February 1980, resulted in the dismissal of two-thirds of the officers of the armed forces and the death of Maj. Roy Horb. In February a former Minister of Social Affairs, Dr Errol Alibux, was appointed Prime Minister. He formed a new Council of Ministers, composed of members of two left-wing parties, the Progressive Workers' and Farm Labourers' Union (PALU) and the Revolutionary People's Party (RVP). The new Government immediately lifted the restrictions imposed in December 1982.

During 1983 Suriname continued to seek closer relations with socialist states, to compensate for the economic dislocation caused by the withdrawal of Dutch aid. In May and June Suriname made political and cultural accords with Libya and Cuba respectively. Offers of economic, financial and military assistance from Suriname's neighbour Brazil, however, succeeded in curbing Cuban influence. Following the US invasion of Grenada in October 1983, Suriname requested the recall of the Cuban ambassador and expelled 105 Cuban advisers and diplomats. In November numerous arrests occurred, following reports of an attempted coup.

In December 1983 the Government faced its most serious challenge when 4,000 workers in the bauxite industry began a strike in protest at proposed increases in income tax. Bank, electricity and other employees joined in the disruption. General discontent with the Government coalesced into calls for a return to civilian rule and for the holding of free elections. In January 1984 Bouterse dismissed the Alibux Cabinet, and reached an agreement with the strikers after withdrawing the planned tax increases. Following consultations with the three principal groupings in Surinamese politics (the army and revolutionary movement, the trade unions and the private business sector), an interim government, with Wim Udenhout, a former adviser to Lt-Col Bouterse, as Prime Minister, was created in February to prepare plans for a gradual restoration of constitutional rule. Bouterse hoped to consolidate his position by securing a political base through his 25 February Movement, which had been founded in November 1983. In December 1984 plans for a nominated National Assembly (comprising representatives of the 25 February Movement, the trade unions and the business sector) were announced. The Netherlands Government, however, refused to consider the changes as a significant move towards democratic rule, and regarded them as insufficient to merit the resumption of Dutch aid. In spite of this rejection, Bouterse decided to pursue his institutional changes, and in January 1985 the new National Assembly was inaugurated. A new Cabinet, based on the previous administration, was formed by Udenhout.

Suriname has a territorial dispute with Guyana over an estimated 15,000 sq km (6,000 sq miles) of land in the Corentyne region, and another with French Guiana over land to the east of the Litani river. Both of these disputes have soured relations between Suriname and its neighbours.

Government

In August 1980 the constitution was suspended, and the legislature dissolved. Martial law was declared in March 1982. An interim President assumed office in February 1982, but real power remains with the Commander-in-Chief of the National Army. The nominated National Assembly, created in January 1985, is to sit for 27 months to prepare a new constitution. It may also advise, and demand accountability from, a Cabinet of Ministers appointed by the army, trade unions and private business sector. Suriname comprises nine administrative districts.

Defence

The armed forces numbered over 2,000 men and women in 1983. A 50-member People's Militia was formed in 1982. In 1983 the Government announced plans to increase the size of the army. Also, the People's Militia is to be enlarged.

Economic Affairs

The economy is based mainly on the mining of bauxite (of which Suriname was the world's fourth largest exporter in 1982), which, together with its derivatives (alumina and aluminium), provides about 80% of export earnings, 40% of tax revenue and 18% of the country's gross domestic product (GDP). The bauxite industry is controlled by Suralco, a subsidiary of the US company Alcoa, and Billiton, part of the Royal Dutch/Shell group. In 1981 both companies reduced production by 20% because of a fall in world demand, and in 1982 Billiton cut production by 30%, following the cancellation of a purchase agreement by a US company. Revenue from bauxite was estimated to have fallen by 20% in 1981, and by a further 45% in 1982. Suriname's annual output of bauxite for export declined from 4.9m. metric tons in 1980 to less than 3m. tons in 1983. Prospects for the sector are not encouraging. Exports of metal-grade bauxite have been halted. In March 1984 Billiton and Suralco announced plans to reorganize their mining and refining activities because of poor market prospects. Production was then running at only 60%–70% of capacity. The loss of production, due to strikes within the bauxite industry, and the low international price for aluminium further depressed the industry during 1984. Plans for the development of bauxite reserves in the Backhuis mountains have been abandoned because of the poor quality of the ore.

Other minerals include iron ore (of which Suriname has estimated reserves of 6,000m. tons), manganese, copper, nickel, platinum, gold and kaolin. In 1981 the Gulf Oil Corporation discovered petroleum-bearing sand in the Saramacca district, and a Suriname State Oil Company was formed. Exploratory offshore drilling began in May 1982. Annual production of crude petroleum was expected to rise from 115,000 barrels in 1983 to 220,000 barrels in 1984. Energy for the Paranam aluminium plant is supplied by the Brokopondo hydroelectric power station. The construction of a second hydroelectric scheme on the Kabalebo river, with total capacity of 500 MW, has been delayed, owing to lack of funds.

Suriname has great agricultural potential and is self-sufficient in sugar, rice, edible oil, citrus fruits, coffee and bananas. Plantains, pulses, maize, coconuts and groundnuts are also grown, but the rice industry is the only fully developed sector. The fully-mechanized rice farm at Wageningen is one of the largest in the world and, with the planting of 20,000 ha in western Suriname in 1981, production is expected to double by 1986. Output of milled rice reached a record 210,000 metric tons in 1984. Export duty on rice was abolished, in an attempt to boost exports of the crop, in 1981. Oil palm is the second most important crop. Cultivation began in 1976, and by 1982 covered 2,800 ha. A palm oil refinery at Victoria, in the Brokopondo area, began operating in 1977, and produced 3,300 litres of edible oil in 1981, virtually satisfying local demand. There were plans to cultivate another 5,000 ha near Moengo, and to double refining capacity by 1983, to enable export to begin. Land under cultivation increased by 82,000 ha in 1982. Much of the new area was designated for the production of rice and palm oil. Fishing, particularly for shrimps, is growing in importance, and its share in export earnings rose from 2% in 1973 to 8% by 1977.

About 90% of Suriname is covered by forest but only 10% is commercially exploited. The forestry industry is dominated by Bruynzeel, originally a Dutch company but nationalized in 1982. The industrial sector is dominated by foodstuff and consumer industries. The annual growth in manufacturing output has varied widely in recent years. It was 18.4% in 1976, 4.9% in 1977, 10.9% in 1978 and 9.2% in 1979. Production fell by 7% in 1980 but grew by 13% in 1981. Growth in GDP during 1983 was achieved only at the cost of high government spending to finance imports: a policy which depleted foreign exchange reserves.

Until 1982 Suriname was relatively prosperous compared with its neighbours, on account of its bauxite exports and aid from the Netherlands, which amounted to Sf 1,700m. between 1975 and 1982, of a total of Sf 3,500m. to be disbursed over 15 years. Following the events of December 1982, the aid was halted, and this has precipitated a serious decline in the economy. In 1983 Suriname was forced to draw from its foreign reserves in order to finance an escalating budget deficit and costly capital expenditure programmes. By October 1984 the country's total non-gold reserves, which had stood at US $207m. at the end of 1981, had slumped to US $18.7m., foreshadowing a major economic crisis. Suriname expected to secure loans amounting to US $300m. in 1984, but an IMF loan of $100m. was withdrawn in February 1984 after the Government revoked proposed tax increases, stipulated by the IMF as a condition for the loan. In July further negotiations with the IMF for US $30m. in balance-of-payments support broke down, owing to Bouterse's refusal to accept conditions proposed by the IMF, including the devaluation of the Suriname guilder and large reductions in the public sector work-force. As a result of budget cuts, many ambitious development projects have been temporarily abandoned.

The decline in bauxite exports accounted for a trade deficit in 1981, the first since 1975, and a budget deficit of US $26m. In 1983 a budget deficit of Sf 309.6m., equivalent to 13.5% of GDP, was recorded. Suriname's GDP increased by an estimated 2.5% in 1982. The rate of inflation rose from 8.8% in 1978 to 14.9% in 1979, but fell to 13.2% in 1980, 8.7% in 1981, 7.3% in 1982 and 4.4% in 1983. The rate of unemployment was estimated at 18% in 1982. Large numbers of illegal Guyanese immigrants, working in Suriname, were expelled from the country at the beginning of 1985. The five-week strike by bauxite workers in 1984 was estimated to have caused losses of US $70m. The economic decline has been further affected by an outward flight of capital, following the unrest of December 1982.

Suriname is a member of the OAS, the IDB and the International Bauxite Association, and in 1978 joined GATT and the IMF.

Transport and Communications

In 1977 there were 2,500 km of roads, the majority of which are in the north of the country. There were 167 km of railways in 1980. Suriname is served by many shipping companies and has 1,500 km of navigable rivers and canals. There is an international airport at Zanderij, which is served by various foreign airlines, and 35 airstrips throughout the country.

Social Welfare

There is a modern medical service, financed by Dutch and EEC funds, but social welfare has remained largely dependent on private initiative within the various religious communities. In 1978 Suriname had 17 hospital establishments, with a total of 2,073 beds, and there were 214 physicians working in the country. In 1980 the Government announced its intention to establish a free health service.

Education

Compulsory education for children between six and 12 years of age has existed since 1876, and is available in government and denominational schools. Education is free up to and including higher education, provided by the University of Suriname. In 1978 the rate of illiteracy among people aged 15 to 60 was estimated to be 35% (males 31.6%; females 37.1%). In 1983 the Government launched a literacy campaign, entitled 'Alfa 84'. This was to be followed by a programme of adult education, to commence in 1985.

Tourism

Tourism is undeveloped but tourist attractions include the unspoiled interior, many varieties of plants, birds and animals and varied cultural activities. The Foundation for Nature Preservation in Suriname is running various pilot schemes in the eight nature reserves in operation. In 1981 Suriname received 52,423 foreign visitors by air, and a further 13,673 by road from French Guiana.

SWAZILAND

Introductory Survey

Location, Climate, Language, Religion, Flag, Capital

The Kingdom of Swaziland is a land-locked country in southern Africa, bordered by South Africa to the north, west, south and south-east, and by Mozambique to the east. The average annual temperature is about 16°C (61°F) on the Highveld, and about 22°C (72°F) in the sub-humid Lowveld, while annual rainfall ranges from 1,000 mm (40 in) to 2,250 mm (90 in) on the Highveld, and from 500 mm (20 in) to 600 mm (25 in) in the Lowveld. English and siSwati are the official languages. About 60% of the population profess Christianity, while most of the remainder adhere to traditional beliefs. The national flag (proportions 3 by 2) is blue, with a yellow-edged horizontal crimson stripe (one-half of the depth) in the centre. On this stripe is a black and white Swazi shield, superimposed on two spears and a staff, all lying horizontally. Mbabane is the administrative capital, while Lobamba, the traditional capital of the Swazi people, is to become the country's legislative capital.

Recent History

In 1890 Swaziland came under the joint rule of the United Kingdom and the South African (Transvaal) Republic, established by Dutch (Boer) settlers. In 1894, under a convention between the administering countries, the Transvaal Government was given powers of protection and administration over Swaziland, without actually incorporating the territory. Sobhuza II became Ngwenyama (Paramount Chief) of Swaziland in 1899, when only a few months old, but his mother, Labotsibeni, acted as regent until 1921.

Following the South African War of 1899–1902, the Transvaal Government's powers passed to the United Kingdom. In 1903 Swaziland became a British protectorate. In 1907 it became one of the High Commission Territories, the others being the colony of Basutoland (now the Kingdom of Lesotho) and the protectorate of Bechuanaland (now the Republic of Botswana). The British Act of Parliament that established the Union of South Africa in 1910 also provided for the possible inclusion in South Africa of the three High Commission Territories. The United Kingdom, however, guaranteed that any such change in status would not be made without consulting the local inhabitants. Until 1960, successive South African governments asked for the transfer of the three territories, but the native chiefs always objected to such a scheme.

Swaziland's first constitution was introduced by the British Government in December 1963. Elections for the first Legislative Council, held in June 1964, resulted in an overwhelming victory for the Imbokodvo ('Grindstone') National Movement, a royalist group which supports the traditional Swazi way of life, allied to progressive evolution. In April 1967 the party won all 24 seats in a new House of Assembly. Later that month, Swaziland achieved internal self-government as a protected state, with Sobhuza recognized as King of Swaziland and Head of State. At the same time, the leader of the Imbokodvo National Movement, Prince Makhosini Dlamini (a member of the royal family), was appointed Prime Minister. The constitution provided for a bicameral Parliament, with a nominated Senate as well as the elected House of Assembly. Swaziland became independent, within the Commonwealth, on 6 September 1968.

In April 1973, in response to a motion passed by both Houses of Parliament, the King repealed the Constitution, suspended all political activity and took over all judicial, legislative and executive powers himself. The leading opposition party, the Ngwane National Liberatory Congress (NNLC), was banned in November 1975. Following disturbances in October 1977 over pay structures, the Swaziland National Teachers' Organization was also banned. Political dissent continued throughout 1978, and several senior officials were arrested and imprisoned. Several members of the banned South African Pan-Africanist Congress were detained and expelled from Swaziland in April 1978, and South African refugees were frequent victims of the detention law in 1979.

A new constitution, promulgated in October 1978, provided for the establishment of a bicameral Parliament (Libandla), comprising a Senate (20 members) and a House of Assembly (50 members). No political parties were permitted. Later in October, elections were held for an 80-member electoral college. From its members, the college chose 10 Senators and 40 members of the House. The King appointed a further 10 members to each chamber. The new Parliament, which has only advisory functions, was opened in January 1979. The Prime Minister, Maj.-Gen. Maphevu Dlamini (who had replaced Prince Makhosini Dlamini in March 1976), died in October 1979 and was succeeded in November by Prince Mabandla N.F. Dlamini. During 1980 the new Prime Minister released a number of detained political opponents, and a commission of enquiry was formed to investigate allegations of government corruption, but its work was effectively terminated following Sobhuza's intervention.

King Sobhuza died in August 1982, after over 60 years as monarch. The powers of Head of State were temporarily transferred to the Queen Mother (Indlovukazi) Dzeliwe, who was to act as Regent until Sobhuza's designated successor, Prince Makhosetive (born in April 1968), came of age. Following Sobhuza's death, a power struggle took place between traditionalist and modernist elements in the Liqoqo (the Supreme Council of State), an advisory body which had been appointed by the King. In 1983 the traditionalists gained the upper hand, following the dismissal in March of the Prime Minister, Prince Mabandla Dlamini, who had appeared to be making moves towards a more democratic style of government. He was replaced by the conservative Prince Bhekimpi Dlamini, previously deputy to the Deputy Prime Minister. In August Queen Regent Dzeliwe, who had supported Prince Mabandla and had refused to sign a document acknowledging the supreme authority of the Liqoqo, was also ousted from power in favour of Ntombi, another of Sobhuza's wives and the mother of Crown Prince Makhosetive. All opposition to the dismissal of Queen Dzeliwe was swiftly crushed: protesting students were arrested, the Minister of Home Affairs, Prince Gabeni (who defended Dzeliwe), was dismissed, and the High Court was forbidden to pass judgment when Dzeliwe applied to have her deposition declared void. The official investiture of Queen Regent Ntombi took place in September. Elections for the electoral college were held in October, and Prince Bhekimpi was reappointed Prime Minister. A new Cabinet was formed in November, purged of members suspected of supporting Mabandla or Dzeliwe. In December 1983 17 people who had been in detention since August, including four members of the royal family, were charged with plotting to overthrow Queen Regent Ntombi. The charges were later withdrawn, however, and by mid-April 1984 all the detainees had been released.

In April 1984 Prince Bhekimpi announced that a coup plot against him had been foiled in March. He later accused the Minister of Finance, Dr Sishayi Nxumalo, of leading the 'Gang of Four', who had allegedly planned the coup. In June 1984 Dr Nxumalo was dismissed from office, together with the Minister of Foreign Affairs and the heads of the army and the police force, who were accused of further attempts to seize power. The dismissals followed Dr Nxumalo's allegations that several prominent Swazi politicians had been involved in the misappropriation of funds that were due to the Southern African Customs Union. Plans to investigate the allegations were announced, following pressure from the South African Government, but in September it became evident that those implicated in the fraud were to be exempted from the investigations, when the authorities issued a decree granting immunity from prosecution to members of the Liqoqo over matters arising from their official activities. It was also announced in September 1984 that Prince Sozisa Dlamini, the Chairman of the Liqoqo and the Authorized Person (empowered to perform the functions of the Queen Regent if she is unable to do so), had been suspended by the Liqoqo, following his alleged attempt to stage a coup in June 1984, with the help of the armed forces.

Swaziland has pursued a policy of dialogue and co-operation with white-ruled South Africa, while attaching considerable importance to maintaining good relations with other black African states. In early 1982 Swaziland and South Africa began discussions concerning the possibility of transferring to Swaziland the South-African controlled KaNgwane 'homeland' and part of the KwaZulu 'homeland', with a population of 750,000 Swazis. Swaziland has long held claims to the area as part of its historical territory. Following a series of protests against the proposed transfer by the people of KaNgwane and KwaZulu and the rejection of the proposals by the South African Supreme Court, a commission of enquiry was set up. The commission was disbanded in June 1984, and the South African Minister of Foreign Affairs subsequently announced that no transfer would take place without the full consent of the 'homelands'. The plan appeared to have been formally abandoned in August 1984, when South Africa granted KaNgwane 'self-government' status, despite Swaziland's objections.

In the late 1970s, members of the African National Congress (ANC), a nationalist organization outlawed in South Africa, increasingly used Swaziland as a base from which to conduct guerrilla attacks over the border into South Africa. In February 1982, while negotiations concerning the proposed land deal (see above) were under way, Swaziland and South Africa signed a secret non-aggression pact. As a result, Swaziland showed increasing unwillingness to provide asylum to ANC members, and several were arrested and expelled. Following the signing of the Nkomati accord between South Africa and Mozambique in March 1984, which banned both countries from harbouring dissidents, many ANC members fled from Mozambique to neighbouring Swaziland. Clashes between ANC guerrillas and the Swazi security forces escalated, resulting in the deaths of three ANC members and a senior police officer. By July 1984, over 80 ANC members were reported to have been deported to other African countries, and in August Swaziland and Mozambique signed a security pact designed to prevent further cross-border violence. Tension between the Swaziland Government and the ANC increased still further, following the murder in December 1984 of the deputy chief of the Swazi security police. Although the ANC denied any involvement in the killing, the Government mounted a campaign to arrest all ANC fugitives remaining in the country. Meanwhile, Swaziland's signing of an agreement with South Africa in December 1984 providing for the exchange of trade representatives, provided further evidence of the two countries' increasing co-operation.

Government

Under the provisions of the 1978 constitution, executive authority is vested in the King and is exercised through a Cabinet presided over by a Prime Minister. All Ministers are nominated by the King. Parliament consists of the Senate and the House of Assembly. The House of Assembly has 50 members—40 elected by an 80-member Electoral College and 10 appointed by the King. The Senate has 20 members, 10 elected by the Electoral College and 10 appointed by the King. The country is divided into 40 chieftaincies (Tinkhundla), each of which elects two members to the Electoral College. Each of the country's four regions is to have a council comprising members of the Electoral College, to co-ordinate activities at a regional level and to implement government policies. On the death of King Sobhuza in August 1982, the powers of Head of State were transferred to the Queen Mother Dzeliwe, and later to Queen Ntombi (see Recent History), who is to act as Regent until Sobhuza's designated successor, Prince Makhosetive (born in 1968), comes of age. The Queen Regent is advised in all matters of state by the Supreme Council of State (the Liqoqo), and is assisted in the administration of state affairs by the Authorized Person.

Defence

The Umbutfo Swaziland Defence Force, created in 1973, totalled 2,657 regular troops in November 1983. Swaziland also has a paramilitary police force. Compulsory military service of two years was introduced in 1983.

Economic Affairs

Only about 55% of the total land area is Swazi-owned and is held in trust by the King as Nation Land. Traditional subsistence farming is the principal source of livelihood in these areas, while the remainder is divided into individual tenure farms, owned mainly by Europeans and commercial companies. Agricultural production accounts for about 30% of GDP and about 70% of export earnings. About 75% of the working population are engaged in agriculture. Sugar cane is the principal agricultural item in the economy, and sugar provided 46% of export earnings in 1981. There are two sugar mills in the Lowveld, producing 200,000 metric tons of sugar annually, and the large Simunye white sugar complex, which came into operation in 1980, achieved its full production capacity of 120,000 tons in 1982/83. Swaziland's total output of raw sugar in 1982/83 was 379,000 metric tons. Increased financial assistance from the state became necessary in 1982, however, because of depressed world sugar prices, and in 1983 Swaziland was granted SDR9m. by the IMF to cover a shortfall in export earnings which resulted from the decline in sugar prices. In 1983/84 the country's sugar production increased to 420,000 tons, of which 370,000 tons were exported. Cattle form the main wealth of the Swazi people, while citrus fruits, cotton, rice and maize are important agricultural products. Pineapples and tobacco are also grown. Swaziland became self-sufficient in maize in 1975, and a series of rural development programmes aims to repeat this achievement with other crops. In 1983, however, drought conditions resulted in an estimated 30% shortfall in the maize crop. A severe cyclone struck Swaziland in January 1984, causing extensive damage to crops, roads and communications. An international appeal was launched for aid towards rehabilitation and reconstruction.

Mining has declined in recent years, and the sector's share of GDP fell from 10% in the 1960s to 3% in 1982. Production of iron ore ceased in 1978, when the high-grade reserves which had been exploited at Ngwenya since 1964 became exhausted. Reserves of chrysolite asbestos have been extensively exploited, and 27,000 tons were exported in 1982. However, Turner and Newall, who operate the country's main asbestos mine, have announced that production is to cease in 1986. Coal holds the country's most important mineral potential, with reserves estimated at 250m. tons. Coal is currently mined at Mpaka, where annual output is about 150,000 tons. Further coal reserves were discovered in 1983 at Lobuka, and in 1984 plans to construct a thermal power station were under consideration. The Government is currently investigating the commercial viability of other mineral deposits, which include tin, kaolin, pyrophyllite and silica, and small gold and diamond deposits are being exploited in the north-west of the country, with the value of gold reserves estimated at between US $3m. and $4m.

Manufacturing industries are concerned mainly with processing agricultural, livestock and forestry products. Commercial timber reserves cover about 120,000 ha, and the export of wood pulp is the second largest earner of foreign exchange. There are four sawmills, of which the largest, at Bhunya, produces about 150,000 metric tons of wood pulp annually. Swaziland's first industrial estate was opened at Matsapa in 1964, and several secondary industries, including a television assembly plant, have become established there. A second industrial centre is being developed in the south at Nhlangano. The construction of a petroleum refinery is also planned. A brickworks has been constructed near Mpaka to utilize the high-grade clay deposits in the area. Production began in 1984, with output forecast to reach 65m. bricks per year. Infrastructural facilities, including the construction of a dam project and two major new townships, were incorporated in the Simunye sugar complex. There are also plans to assist industrialization by providing alternative routes to world markets. Projects include improvements to Matsapa airport, and a further 115 km to be added to the rail link with South Africa to complete the connection with eastern Swaziland.

Although company tax remains low and the country is anxious to attract foreign capital, Africanization was speeded up in Swaziland during 1973 with a series of radical measures. These included more participation in the mining industry, part-nationalization of the two main banks, a monopoly of insurance, extra taxes on sugar in the form of a heavy levy on producers and more taxes on the thriving hotel industry as well as a Land

Speculation Act. Swaziland's attempts to attract foreign investment have been hampered by competition from South Africa, which offers lucrative investment allowances to promote industrial development in the 'homelands'. In September 1984 the Swazi Government announced that an 'incentive package' was to be implemented, in an effort to encourage investment in the agricultural and mining sectors, which had been underexploited, owing to lack of capital. Unemployment is a problem, and the country's economic stagnation has been aggravated by declining markets for sugar and asbestos, and by the effects of drought and cyclone damage. Inflation is associated with price levels in South Africa, as a result of the two countries' close economic links, and averaged 14.7% annually during 1977–82. Inflation was estimated at 10.4% during 1983. According to estimates by the World Bank, gross national product per head in 1982 was US $940 (at average 1980–82 prices), having shown an average annual growth rate of 4.2% over the 1960–82 period. Swaziland's third National Development Plan, introduced in 1977 and revised in 1980, forecast average annual growth of 6.5% in the agricultural sector and 7% in the manufacturing and processing sectors. Public sector investment in construction was also set at an annual 7% growth rate by the end of 1983. Growth rates fell far short of these targets, however, and reached an average of only 2.2% annually in 1978–81, dropping still further to 1% in 1982. Government estimates forecast an annual average of 2.1% growth in GDP over the 1984–89 period; however, this projected growth is insufficient to offset the country's estimated 3.4% annual increase in population.

Swaziland is a member of the Southern African Customs Union (formed in 1969), which comprises Botswana, Lesotho, South Africa and Swaziland. Swaziland is also a member of the Southern African Development Co-ordination Conference (SADCC, see p. 205), founded in 1979 to work towards the reduction of economic dependence on South Africa.

Transport and Communications

The 224-km Swaziland railway runs from the iron ore mine at Ngwenya, near Mbabane, on the western border through the middle of Swaziland to the Mozambique border near Goba, where it connects with the Mozambique line to the port of Maputo. In November 1978 work was completed on a 93-km rail link with South Africa to give land-locked Swaziland direct access to the ports of Richards Bay and Durban. The line, built at a cost of E25m., runs from Phuzumoya in Swaziland and joins the South African railways system at Lavusima (Gollel). In 1982 plans to extend this rail link to eastern Swaziland were announced. In 1983 the E40m. contract to extend the railway network to the northern border with South Africa was granted to a South African company. There are 2,723 km of roads including a 170-km highway from Ngwenya, on the western border, to Lomahasha on the Mozambique border, of which 104 km are tarred. Work started on a 52-km road linking Lomahasha with the north-east in 1983. The severe cyclone that struck Swaziland in January 1984 caused extensive damage to the country's infrastructure. In June 1984 finance was being sought for a US $30m. project to reconstruct roads and more than 100 bridges that had been washed away during the cyclone. The main airport is at Matsapa, near Manzini. A telecommunications satellite facility was established in the Ezulwini Valley in 1983.

Social Welfare

In 1976 Swaziland had 17 hospitals, with 1,462 beds. In 1978 there were 75 physicians, 131 nurses and 731 midwives.

Education

Primary education, which is not compulsory, begins at seven years of age. In 1982 an estimated 88% of children aged seven–12 attended school. In 1983 there were 468 primary schools, with 129,767 pupils, and 27,000 pupils in a total of 89 secondary schools. There are two teacher training colleges. Higher education is provided by the University of Swaziland, at which 1,064 students were enrolled in 1982/83. Vocational and other training is provided by the Swaziland Industrial Training Institute, the Swaziland Agriculture College and University Centre and the Government's Staff Training Institute. In 1979 the adult literacy rate was estimated at between 25% and 35%.

Tourism

Swaziland has some magnificent mountain scenery, particularly in the Ezulwini Valley. There are game reserves at Mlilwane and Hlane. Tourism expanded rapidly to a record 135,000 visitors in 1976, of whom an estimated 80% were short-stay visitors travelling by road from South Africa. Increased petrol prices, however, resulted in a decline to 70,000 tourists in 1978. In 1980 there were 82,000 visitors, and tourist receipts totalled US $33m. In 1978 there were 26 hotels and two casinos, and there are plans to build other hotels and a third casino.

Public Holidays

1985: 16 May (Ascension Day), 22 July (Birthday of the late King Sobhuza), 24 August (Umhlanga (Reed Dance) Day), 6 September (Somhlolo (Independence) Day), 24 October (United Nations Day), 25, 26 December (Christmas and Boxing Day).

1986: 1 January (New Year's Day), 13 March (Commonwealth Day), 28–31 March (Easter), 25 April (National Flag Day).

The Incwala Ceremony is held in December or January, but the exact date is variable each year.

Weights and Measures

The metric system is in use.

Currency and Exchange Rates

Swazi and South African currency are both legal tender.

Exchange rates (31 December 1984):
1 lilangeni = 1 rand;
£1 sterling = 2.2985 emalangeni or rand;
US $1 = 1.988 emalangeni or rand.

Directory

The Constitution

The Constitution seeks to maintain a non-racial state in which everyone will be treated equally without discrimination, regardless of race, colour or creed, and securing to everyone freedom and justice and inviolability of their property.

The King of Swaziland, called the Ngwenyama (the Lion) in siSwati, is Head of State. Succession is governed by Swazi law and custom. The executive authority is vested in the King and exercised through a Cabinet of Ministers presided over by the Prime Minister. The King or, in his absence, the Liqoqo (see below) may, at any time, appoint an Authorized Person to perform, on behalf of the Queen Regent, the functions of her office if she is unable to do so.

The Liqoqo, or Supreme Council of State, consists of 16 members, all appointed by the King, and advises him on all matters of State.

Under the independence Constitution, legislative power was vested in a bicameral Parliament, comprising a Senate and a House of Assembly. In April 1973, in response to a motion passed by both Houses of Parliament, the late King Sobhuza repealed the Constitution, suspended political activity and took over all judicial, legislative and executive powers himself. These powers were, however, immediately reinvested in a Cabinet of Ministers, and the Judiciary continued with little modification.

A new Constitution, which confirmed the power of the King, was promulgated on 13 October 1978, although it has not been formally presented to the people. The Constitution is based on traditional tribal communities, called Tinkhundla, and provides for a bicameral Parliament (Libandla) comprising a House of Assembly with 50 deputies and a Senate with 20 Senators. Parliament's functions are confined to debating government proposals and advising the King. No political parties are permitted. An 80-member electoral college, with two members chosen by the people from each Inkhundla, elects from its members 40 deputies and 10 Senators. The King appoints a further 10 members to each chamber.

Note: On the death of King Sobhuza on 21 August 1982, the full powers of the Head of State were transferred to the constitutional dual monarch, the Queen Mother, or Indlovukazi ('Great She Elephant') in siSwati. The Queen Mother, Indlovukazi Dzeliwe, also took the title of Queen Regent. On 9 August 1983 Indlovukazi Dzeliwe was replaced as Queen Mother and Regent by Indlovukazi Ntombi, the mother of the heir to the throne, Prince Makhosetive. It is expected that Queen Regent Ntombi will act in this role until her son (born in April 1968) comes of age and assumes the throne. The Queen Regent is advised in all matters of State by the Supreme Council of State (the Liqoqo), and is assisted in administering state affairs by the Authorized Person, Prince Sozisa Dlamini (the senior Royal Prince and Chairman of the Liqoqo).

RAILWAYS

A 224-km railway line from Bomvu Ridge, near Mbabane, joins the Mozambique railway system at Goba near the Mozambique border. The main traffic is wood-pulp, sugar, molasses, coal, citrus fruit and canned fruit. A 93-km link with the South African railway network was opened in November 1978 to provide Swaziland with direct access to the ports of Richards Bay and Durban. Plans to extend this rail link to eastern Swaziland were announced in 1982. The project, estimated to cost E63m., was scheduled for completion in November 1985. There were 312 km of railways in 1984.

SYRIA

Introductory Survey

Location, Climate, Language, Religion, Flag, Capital

The Syrian Arab Republic lies in western Asia, with Turkey to the north, Iraq to the east and Jordan to the south. Lebanon and Israel are to the south-west. Syria has a coastline on the eastern shore of the Mediterranean Sea. Much of the country is mountainous and semi-desert. The coastal climate is one of hot summers and mild winters. The inland plateau and plains are dry but cold in winter. Average temperatures in Damascus are 2°C to 12°C (36°F to 54°F) in January and 18°C to 37°C (64°F to 99°F) in August. The national language is Arabic, with Kurdish a minority language. More than 80% of the population are Muslims (mostly Sunnis) but there is an important Christian minority of various sects. The national flag (proportions 2 by 1) has three equal horizontal stripes, of red, white and black, with two five-pointed green stars in the centre of the white stripe. The capital is Damascus.

Recent History

Syria was formerly part of Turkey's Ottoman Empire. Turkish forces were defeated in the First World War (1914–18) and Syria was occupied in 1920 by France, in accordance with a League of Nations mandate. Syrian nationalists proclaimed an independent republic in September 1941. French powers were transferred in January 1944, and full independence was achieved on 17 April 1946. In December 1949 Syria came under an army dictatorship, led by Brig. Adib Shishekly. He was elected President in July 1953 but was overthrown by another army coup in February 1954.

In February 1958 Syria merged with Egypt to form the United Arab Republic (UAR). In September 1961, following an army coup in Damascus, Syria seceded and formed the independent Syrian Arab Republic. In 1963 Maj-Gen. Amin al-Hafiz formed a government in which members of the Arab Socialist Renaissance (Baath) Party were predominant. In February 1966 the army deposed the Government of President Hafiz, replacing him by Dr Nureddin al-Atasi. However, in November 1970, after a bloodless coup, the military (moderate) wing of the Baath Party seized power, led by Lt-Gen. Hafez al-Assad, who was elected President in March 1971. In March 1972 the National Progressive Front, a grouping of the five main political parties, was formed under the leadership of President Assad.

Increasing border tension between Syria and Israel was a major influence leading to the Six-Day War of June 1967, when Israel attacked its Arab neighbours as a reprisal for the closure of the Strait of Tiran by the UAR (Egypt). Israeli forces quickly made territorial gains, including the Golan heights region of Syria, which remains under Israeli occupation. An uneasy truce lasted until October 1973, and all attempts by outside powers to arrange a peace settlement failed. War broke out again in October 1973, when Egyptian and Syrian forces launched simultaneous attacks on Israeli-held territory. On the Syrian front, there was fierce fighting in the Golan Heights area until a cease-fire was agreed after 18 days. In May 1974 the US Secretary of State, Dr Henry Kissinger, secured an agreement for the disengagement of forces. Israel formally annexed the Golan Heights in December 1981, hampering the chances of a negotiated final peace agreement.

Syria did not approve of the second interim Egyptian-Israeli Disengagement Agreement in September 1975, but agreed to acknowledge it as an accomplished fact at the Arab summit conferences in Riyadh and Cairo in October 1976, in return for Egypt's acceptance of Syria's role in Lebanon. Syria had progressively intervened in the Lebanese civil war during 1976, finally providing the bulk of the 30,000-strong Arab Deterrent Force (ADF). In mid-1981 tension was greatly intensified when Syria moved surface-to-air missiles into Lebanon for possible use against Israel.

Syria condemned President Sadat of Egypt's peace initiative with Israel in November and December 1977, the Camp David agreements between Egypt and Israel, signed in September 1978, and the subsequent peace treaty concluded between them. In 1981 Crown Prince (later King) Fahd of Saudi Arabia presented a plan for solving the Palestinian question, which tacitly recognized Israel. Syria was not alone in having deep misgivings about the plan, and in November 1981 a summit conference of Arab states in Fez, Morocco, broke up over failure to approve it. A greater sense of realism forced Syria to agree to proposals for the attainment of peace in the Middle East, based on the 'Fahd plan', at a further Fez summit in September 1982.

The ADF, based in northern Lebanon, was unable to act when Israel invaded southern Lebanon in June 1982 and advanced to Beirut, trapping 14,000–15,000 troops of the Palestine Liberation Organization (PLO) and Syrian forces. In August these troops were evacuated under the supervision of a multinational peace-keeping force, and some 50,000 Syrian troops, deployed in the Beka'a valley and northern Lebanon, faced 25,000 Israelis in the south of the country, even though the mandate of the ADF had expired.

Syria has consistently opposed US-sponsored diplomatic initiatives towards a peace agreement in Lebanon. When protracted talks culminated in the signing on 17 May 1983 of an Israel-Lebanon peace agreement, formulated by US Secretary of State George Shultz, Syria, predictably, rejected it. President Assad viewed the agreement as an infringement of Lebanese sovereignty, imposed by Israel and its US ally, and as a threat to Syrian security. He refused to observe the clause providing for the withdrawal of all foreign forces from Lebanon within three months, stating that Israel was an invading force, while Syrian troops had been invited into the country by the Lebanese Government. In the ensuing military and diplomatic deadlock, Assad continued to supply the militias of the Lebanese Druze and Shi'ite factions in their fight against the Lebanese Government and the Christian Phalangists in and around Beirut and in the Chouf mountains. At the same time he tried to unite Lebanese opposition leaders in a pro-Syrian 'national front' against the Government of President Amin Gemayel.

Syria backed a revolt which erupted in Lebanon's Beka'a valley in May 1983 against Yasser Arafat's leadership of the Palestine National Liberation Movement (Fatah). Syrian and rebel PLO forces finally trapped Arafat, the PLO Chairman, in the Lebanese port of Tripoli in November. After fierce fighting, Arafat and some 4,000 of his followers were permitted to leave Tripoli by boat in December for various destinations in the Middle East.

Although Israel withdrew its forces from Beirut to the Awali river in September 1983, Syria's troops remained entrenched in the north of Lebanon, occasionally exchanging fire with US aircraft from the naval fleet standing offshore in support of the US contingent in the multinational peace-keeping force in Beirut. The state of civil war existing in and around Beirut eventually compelled the evacuation of the multinational force in the first three months of 1984. In March President Gemayel was forced to succumb to the controlling influence of Syria in the affairs of Lebanon. He abrogated the 17 May agreement with Israel, as President Assad had always insisted that he should, and reconvened the National Reconciliation Conference of the rival Lebanese factions (which had first met in Geneva in November 1983) in Lausanne, under pressure from Syria to agree constitutional reforms which would give the majority Muslim community of Lebanon greater representation in government. In return, Gemayel received guarantees of internal security from Syria.

The National Reconciliation Conference failed to produce the results for which Syria had hoped, and it saw the beginning of the disintegration of the Lebanese National Salvation Front, comprised of leading Lebanese opponents of President Amin Gemayel, which had been established, with Syrian backing, in July 1983. At the Conference, a former Lebanese President, Sulaiman Franjiya, vetoed Syrian plans for constitutional changes in Lebanon, involving the diminution of the powers of the President, traditionally a Maronite Christian. The Conference broke up, with no agreement having been reached on how to increase Muslim representation in the Lebanese Government.

At talks in April 1984, President Assad approved plans for a government of national unity in Lebanon, put to him by President Gemayel, giving equal representation in the Cabinet to Muslims and Christians. Despite their misgivings, Nabih Berri of the Shi'ite Amal militia and Walid Joumblatt, the Lebanese Druze leader (both of whom receive financial support from Syria), were persuaded to participate in the new government by President Assad. Inter-factional fighting continued in Beirut, however, and Syria, usually in the person of Vice-President Abdel Halim Khaddam, was repeatedly required to intervene to bring the squabbling factions to a compromise through their leaders in the Cabinet.

By dint of Syrian mediation, a security plan for Beirut was agreed and put into operation at the beginning of July 1984. The plan met with only limited success, and the extent of Syria's influence with its Lebanese allies came into question when even the threat of force failed to win Walid Joumblatt's unequivocal approval of an extension of the security plan to allow the Lebanese Army into the Druze stronghold of the Chouf mountaines. In September Syria arranged a truce to end fighting in Tripoli between the pro-Syrian Arab Democratic Party and the Sunni Muslim Tawheed Islami (Islamic Unification Movement). This prepared the way for the Lebanese Army to enter the city in November, under the terms of an extended security plan, backed by Syria, to assert the authority of the Lebanese Government. On this occasion, Walid Joumblatt's opposition to the plan's provisions for the army to take control of the coastal road south of Beirut appeared to have tacit Syrian approval. However, the plan finally went ahead in January 1985.

Syria's rejection of Israel's demand that any withdrawal from Lebanon should be undertaken by both sides simultaneously was vindicated as it became clear, during the latter half of 1984, that Israel would be forced by domestic economic, political and social pressures to withdraw unilaterally. Syria approved Lebanese participation in talks with the Israelis to co-ordinate the departure of the Israeli Defence Force (IDF) from southern Lebanon with other security forces, in order to prevent an outbreak of civil violence. A series of talks began in Naqoura (Lebanon) in November and repeatedly foundered on the question of which forces should take the place of the IDF. Under Syrian influence, the Lebanese wanted the UN Interim Force in Lebanon (UNIFIL) to police the Israel–Lebanon border (as it had been mandated to do in 1978), and the Lebanese Army to deploy north of the Litani river, between UNIFIL and the Syrians in the Beka'a valley. Israel was not convinced of the competence of the Lebanese Army, and wanted UNIFIL to be deployed north of the Litani, while the Israeli-backed so-called 'South Lebanon army' patrolled the southern Lebanese border. In the absence of any agreement, Israel withdrew from the talks, and on 14 January 1985 the Israeli Cabinet voted to take steps towards a three-phased unilateral withdrawal to the international border. Although the Syrian Government was evidently determined to retain control of events in Lebanon, the imminent Israeli withdrawal offered Syria the prospect of reducing its costly military presence in the north and east of the country. (See Recent Histories of Israel and Lebanon.)

Despite the favourable evolution of events in Lebanon, Syria's progress towards a position of pre-eminence in the Arab world was eroded during 1984, as the rehabilitation of Egypt continued. Syria dissented from the decision to readmit Egypt to membership of the Organization of the Islamic Conference in March 1984, and opposed Jordan's restoration of diplomatic relations with Egypt in September. Syria's attempt to wrest control of the PLO from Yasser Arafat has only succeeded in splitting the movement, while Arafat retains his leadership of the bulk of the organization and has manoeuvred it towards an emergent moderate Arab alliance which includes Egypt, Jordan, Iraq and Saudi Arabia.

Syria's relationship with Iraq has been under strain for some years. Rivalry between different wings of the Baath Party, in Damascus and Baghdad, led to disputes over Syria's use of the waters of the Euphrates river and the closing of the oil pipelines between Kirkuk, in Iraq, and the Syrian port of Banias, on the Mediterranean Sea. There was a brief reconciliation in October 1978, when the two countries pledged to unite, but the friendship ended when a conspiracy in Iraq in July 1979 was attributed to Syrian intrigue. Syria supports Iran in the Gulf War with Iraq, which began in September 1980. Plans for union with Libya, announced in September 1980, seem unlikely to be successful.

Syria has been facing deep internal problems. Regular assassinations of Alawites (a minority Islamic sect to which Assad belongs) indicated sectarian tension, and Assad attributed much of the opposition to the Muslim Brotherhood, a conservative Islamic group. In February 1982 an uprising in Hama, which was believed to be the work of the outlawed Muslim Brotherhood, was put down with brutal ferocity. In January 1985 Assad declared an amnesty for some members of the Muslim Brotherhood who were imprisoned in Syria, and invited those in exile to return to the country.

In January 1980, after the Seventh Congress of the Regional Command of the Baath Party, Assad reshuffled his government, and Dr Abdel-Rauf Kassem replaced Muhammad Ali al-Halabi as Prime Minister. A further reshuffle took place in December 1981. Syria's ties with the USSR were strengthened when Assad visited Moscow in October 1979, and confirmed when Syria signed a 20-year Treaty of Friendship and Co-operation with the USSR in October 1980. Syria has received $2,000m. from the USSR in military loans since 1982, and a total of between $12,000m. and $13,000m. since 1973.

In November 1983 Assad suffered what was thought to be a heart attack. He recovered, but his evidently weakened state aroused speculation as to who would succeed him. During Assad's illness and, periodically, until March 1984, shows of military strength were staged by rivals to the succession, including Rifaat al-Assad, the President's brother and commander of the 20,000–30,000-strong Defence Brigades which controlled Damascus and upheld the regime's authority. A ministerial reshuffle, the first for four years (which had been postponed by Assad's illness), took place in March 1984, merely, it seemed at first, to appoint replacements for four ministers who had died. The new government, however, included an unprecedented three vice-presidents: Abdel Halim Khaddam, Rifaat al-Assad and Zuheir Masharkah. Ostensibly designed to ease Assad's workload following his illness, the appointment of three vice-presidents distributed power evenly between the President's potential successors, giving none the ascendancy. The army, Assad's guarantee of continued power, was still controlled by officers loyal to him.

In what was interpreted as a disciplinary measure against those responsible for the confrontations between military units in and around Damascus between November 1983 and March 1984, Rifaat al-Assad, Gen. Ali Haydar (commander of the Special Forces élite army unit) and Gen. Shafiq Fayyadh (commander of the third armoured division) were sent to Moscow as part of a diplomatic delegation, and then not permitted to return to Syria. Rifaat al-Assad was sent to Geneva, Switzerland, in June, and Gens Haydar and Fayyadh to Sofia, Bulgaria, into what appeared to be temporary exile. While Rifaat al-Assad was abroad, it was variously reported that his Defence Brigades had been disbanded or that they had been placed under the direct command of the Syrian army. It later emerged that they had been absorbed into the army, with the exception of a few units which had been put under the command of Rifaat al-Assad's son-in-law. Rifaat al-Assad was finally allowed to return to Syria in November 1984, and was given responsibility for national security affairs, applying the policies of the ruling Baath party. President Assad was re-elected for a third seven-year term of office in February 1985, and appeared to have regained much of his former authority.

In November 1984 President Mitterrand became the first French leader to visit Syria since the country's independence from France in 1946.

Government

Under the 1973 Constitution, legislative power is vested in the unicameral People's Council, with 195 members elected by universal adult suffrage. Executive power is vested in the President, elected by direct popular vote for a seven-year term. He governs with the assistance of an appointed Council of Ministers, led by the Prime Minister. Syria has 13 administrative districts.

Defence

National service, which normally lasts 30 months, is compulsory for men. In July 1984 the regular armed forces totalled an estimated 362,500 men (including about 140,000 conscripts): an army of 240,000 (including 120,000 conscripts), an air defence command of 50,000, a navy of 2,500 and an air force of 70,000. In addition, Syria had army reserves of 50,000 and navy reserves of 2,500. Paramilitary forces comprise Defence Brigades of about 25,000 men, a gendarmerie of 8,000 and a desert guard (frontier force) of 1,800. It was estimated that 57,000 Syrian troops were deployed in Lebanon in 1984. Defence expenditure for 1984 was estimated at £S12,600m.

Economic Affairs

Petroleum production, which began in 1968, is small compared with some Middle Eastern countries: annual output reached a peak of 9.2m. tons in 1976 and fell to 8.15m. tons in 1982, rising only slightly to 8.4m. in 1983. Nevertheless, crude petroleum is Syria's leading export, regularly accounting for two-thirds or more of total export earnings. Of the US $2,025.8m. earned by exports in 1983, petroleum accounted for $1,512.8m. The economy relies considerably on government revenue from the petroleum industry. However, in 1983 it was independently estimated that Syria's recoverable reserves (1,600m. barrels) would be exhausted in 25 years' time, and it is officially accepted that Syria will survive as a net oil exporter only until the 1990s. Long-term prospects for Syria's oil industry did improve during 1984, however, with the discovery of an oil field near Deir-ez-Zor, which may eventually be able to produce 100,000–150,000 b/d of light, high-quality crude. The total output of Syria's three existing fields averaged about 170,000 b/d in 1984.

A number of problems have beset petroleum production in Syria: the cost of extraction is high, and the crude oil itself was uniformly of poor quality (until the Deir-ez-Zor discovery of 1984), having a high sulphur content, so that it had to be mixed with lighter imported oil to be marketable. Oil prices have fallen recently, owing to a world glut, and in 1981, for the first time since oil exports began in the mid-1970s, Syria had a deficit on trade in petroleum and its derivatives (exports $1,661.5m; imports $1,729.4m.), becoming a net importer in cash terms. Although trading resulted in a small profit in 1982, with domestic demand increasing at a rate of 7% annually and no prospect of substantially increased production, Syria's import bill is likely to rise. Since the closure of the pipeline from Iraq in 1982, of the 11m. tons of light crude oil which it has imported for domestic refining, Syria has received the bulk, an estimated 44m. barrels (including 7.3m. barrels at no cost), from Iran at a substantial discount. In return, Syria has acted as a conduit for arms deliveries to Iran. Iran is treating Syrian debts of about $1,000m., which it is currently unable to pay (owing to a shortage of foreign exchange), as long-term loans. In addition to oil, Iran is the dominant supplier of goods to Syria, its total exports to that country reaching more than $1,000m. in 1983, or 26% of Syria's total merchandise imports (more than three times the value of imports from the second largest supplier, Federal Germany). Syria's reliance on Iran for supplies of crude oil was revealed as a serious weakness in 1984, as hostilities in the Gulf War with Iraq began to hinder the passage of ships in the Gulf, threatening the oil link with Iran. President Assad attempted to restrain Iran from widening the conflict and endangering vital oil supplies.

The plight of its petroleum industry has reduced Syria's earnings of the foreign exchange which it needs to finance development projects, particularly the construction of more power stations. In 1982 Syria's foreign exchange reserves stood at $115m., while in 1979 they had been $581m. Few major contracts were awarded during 1983, and a number of those that were have been subject to postponement or cancellation. The USSR, however, did agree to co-operate in nuclear and other energy projects.

In 1982 Syria's GDP rose by 6.9%, and industrial production by 19% (largely attributable to increases in electricity generation), according to the Central Bank, but the other economic indicators were not encouraging. Although the current account deficit of $251m. in 1982 was slightly less than the 1981 deficit, the position was still much worse than in 1979, when a surplus of $959m. was recorded. Export earnings declined from $2,102.2m. in 1981 to $2,025.8m. in 1982, but the reduction was offset by a much greater fall in the value of imports, from $5,030.8m. to $4,013.3m. The trade deficit widened by $2,600m. (30%) in 1983, when export earnings were $1,923m. and import expenditure was $4,542m. The cost of keeping troops in Lebanon, estimated at $250,000 per day, is a strain on the nation's finances. In recent years, at least 50% of national budget expenditure has consistently been allocated to defence. Such commitments show the value of aid received from Arab states, who pledged $1,850m. per year to Syria's military effort in 1979, though the recession in the oil industry and disenchantment with Syria's regional policy (e.g. its support for Iran) have reduced the amount of Arab aid to a fraction of that promised. Preliminary budget figures for 1985 show a continued commitment to defence. The current balance-of-payments deficit rose to $815m. in 1983, but initial estimates for 1984 indicate that the deficit may have been reduced.

Agriculture was, for many years, the mainstay of the Syrian economy, in spite of the existence of a traditionally strong trading sector and, more recently, relatively successful attempts at industrialization. The agricultural sector provides about one-fifth of Syria's gross domestic product (GDP), and it employed 30% of the working population in 1983. However, agriculture's share of GDP has fallen substantially since the 1960s. It contributed 32.2% of GDP in 1962, 25.6% in 1972 and 18.5% in 1982. The under-use of potential was the initial cause of the decline, but this ceased to be the case during the 1970s, and the continued decline in agriculture owes more in recent years to the growth of the mining and manufacturing sectors.

With its revenues from petroleum dwindling and its crude reserves running out, Syria has realized the necessity of developing its traditional export industries: agriculture, textiles and phosphates. The fifth five-year plan (1981–85) gives agriculture a high priority, allocating £S17,200m. (US $4,380m.) to its development. A major project is the Euphrates Dam, which has been built with Soviet assistance, and which will eventually lead to the irrigation of about 640,000 ha of land, though only about 64,000 ha had been irrigated by 1984.

Cotton was Syria's most valuable export commodity until 1974, when that distinction passed to petroleum. Cotton exports subsequently declined in both value and volume, from being worth £S836m. in 1977 to £S584m. in 1982. However, cotton remains the leading cash crop, with 80% of production being exported. The annual output of seed cotton has been increasing since the 1982/83 season, and reached a record 516,444 tons in 1983/84. The area under cotton, which fell from 292,000 ha in 1963 to 138,810 ha in 1980/81, increased to 172,559 ha in 1983/84, and earnings from cotton exports rose to £S1,008m. in 1983. The harvest of sugar beet has also risen, from 860,300 tons in 1982 to 1.2m. tons in 1983, and this, combined with an increase in local refining capacity, helped to bring about a reduction in imports of sugar from 198,272 tons in 1981 to 175,521 tons in 1982. The plan for sugar is to raise production 10-fold during the 1980s.

Syria's grain crop of wheat and barley occupied some 2.7m. ha in 1980, about two-thirds of the total area under cultivation. Output of both crops fluctuates considerably. There is potential for expansion in the production of wheat, barley, tobacco and fruit and vegetables, though income from these remains minimal. Textiles, food processing and cement are the most important industries after petroleum and agriculture. Aleppo and Damascus are thriving commercial centres.

Transport and Communications

Railways run between Homs, Hama and Aleppo, and link Syria with Beirut, in Lebanon, and Amman, in Jordan. There is a line from Homs to Tripoli, in Lebanon, and lines from Aleppo to Turkey and Iraq. A 194-km line links Damascus and Homs, and a line from Tartous to Latakia is being built. There is a network of main roads, and all the principal towns are connected by road. The chief ports are Banias and Latakia. The Trans-Arabian pipeline (TAPLINE), operated by the Arabian-American Oil Co (Aramco) from its oilfields in Saudi Arabia, crosses Syria to Sidon, in Lebanon. Pipelines are easily closed by military activity. International services to Damascus and Aleppo are provided by Syrian Airways and major foreign companies.

Social Welfare

State hospitals provide free medical care for persons unable to afford private medical attention. In 1978 Syria had 130 hospitals, with a total of 8,732 beds, and by 1980 there were about 3,880 physicians. Old-age pensions, and other benefits, are provided by law.

Education

Primary education, which begins at six years of age and last for six years, is officially compulsory. Secondary education, beginning at 12 years of age, also lasts six years. In 1981 an estimated 89% of children in the primary age-group were enrolled (98% of boys; 80% of girls). The ratio at secondary schools was 44% (boys 53%; girls 34%). There are universities at Damascus, Aleppo and Latakia.

Tourism

Syria's tourist attractions include an attractive Mediterranean coastline, the mountains, the town bazaars and the antiquities of Damascus and Palmyra. The number of foreign visitors declined from 1,228,074 in 1980 to 831,635 in 1982.

Directory

The Constitution

A new and permanent constitution was endorsed by 97.6% of the voters in a national referendum on 12 March 1973. The 157-article Constitution defines Syria as a 'Socialist popular democracy' with a 'pre-planned Socialist economy'. Under the new constitution, Lt-Gen. al-Assad remained President, with the power to appoint and dismiss his Vice-President, Premier and Government Ministers, and also became Commander-in-Chief of the armed forces, secretary-general of the Baath Socialist Party and President of the National Progressive Front. Legislative power is vested in the People's Council, with 195 members elected by universal adult suffrage.

Legislature

MAJLIS AL-SHA'AB

Elections were held for the 195-member Majlis al-Sha'ab (People's Council) in November 1981. All 195 seats were won by the National Progressive Front, which fought the elections as a coalition of four parties (Baath, Arab Socialist Union, Unionist Socialist and Arab Socialist). The results gave the Baath Party at least 60% of the seats. The Communist Party fought the election independently, and lost all of the eight seats that it had held in the previous People's Council. However, it still forms part of the National Progressive Front.

Speaker: Mahmoud az-Zubi.

Political Organizations

The National Progressive Front, headed by President Assad, was formed in March 1972 by the grouping of the following five parties:

Baath Arab Socialist Party: National Command, BP 849, Damascus; Arab nationalist socialist party; f. 1947; result of merger of the Arab Revival Movement (f.1940) and the Arab Baath Party (f. 1940); brs in most Arab countries; in power since 1963; supports creation of a unified Arab socialist society; Sec.-Gen. Pres. Hafiz al-Assad; Asst Sec.-Gen. Abdullah al-Ahmar; Regional Asst Sec.-Gen. Zuheir Masharkah; more than 800,000 mems in Syria.

Socialist Unionist: Leader Sami Soufan; Sec.-Gen. Fayiz Ismail.

Syrian Arab Socialist Union: Nasserite; Leader Dr Jamal Atasi; Sec.-Gen. Ismael al-Kadhi.

Arab Socialist Party: a breakaway socialist party; Leader Abdel Ghani Kannout.

Communist Party of Syria: pro-Soviet; f. 1924; until 1958 part of joint Communist Party of Syria and Lebanon; Sec.-Gen. Khalid Baghdah.

There is also a Marxist-Leninist Communist Action Party, neither pro-Soviet nor pro-Chinese, which regards itself as independent of all Arab regimes.

First Instance Courts: 72 First Instance Courts, constituted by one judge, deal with all cases other than those within the competence of special tribunals. In some Prefectures there are several Chambers.

Chief Justice of Syria: JAMAL NAAMANI (President of the High Constitutional Court).

PERSONAL STATUS COURTS

For Muslims: each court consists of one judge, the 'Qadi Shari'i', who deals with marriage, divorce, etc.

OTHER COURTS

Courts for Minors: their constitution, officers, sessions, jurisdiction and competence are determined by a special law.

Military Court: Damascus.

Religion

In religion the majority of Syrians follow a form of Islamic Sunni orthodoxy. There is also a considerable number of religious minorities: Shi'a Muslims; Ismaili Muslims; the Ismaili of the Salamiya district, whose spiritual head is the Aga Khan; a large number of Druzes, the Nusairis or Alawites of the Jebel Ansariyeh (to which sect President Assad belongs and who comprise about 11% of the population) and the Yezidis of the Jebel Sinjar, and a minority of Christians.

The Constitution states only that 'Islam shall be the religion of the head of the State'. The original draft of the 1973 Constitution made no reference to Islam at all, and this clause was inserted only as a compromise after public protest. The Syrian Constitution is thus unique among the constitutions of Arab states with a clear Muslim majority in not enshrining Islam as the religion of the State itself.

ISLAM

The majority of Syrians are Muslims. Most of them are Sunnis, with a small number of Ismailis and Shi'ites.

Grand Mufti: AHMAD KUFTARO.

RAILWAYS

The present railway system is composed of the following network: Meydan Ekbez (Turkish frontier)–Aleppo; Cobanbey (Turkish frontier)–Aleppo; Qamishliya (Turkish frontier)–Jaroubieh (Iraq frontier); Aleppo–Homs; Homs–Akkari (Lebanese frontier); Homs–Zerghaya (Lebanese frontier); Aleppo–Latakia; Hama–M'hardeh; there are 1,686 km of normal gauge track (1,435 mm). A line from Latakia to Qamishliya (750 km) has been completed and is operating for passenger and goods traffic. Other new lines completed include an 180-km line from Homs to the phosphate mines at Khenefes and to Palmyra, a 22-km line from Hama to Meharden and a 42-km line from Tartous to Akkari. The line from Homs to Damascus (194 km) was opened in 1983, one from Damascus to Aleppo has also been completed, and an 80-km line from Tartous to Latakia is scheduled to open during 1985. A 170-km line from Deir-ez-Zor to Abou Kemal, near the Iraqi border, is scheduled for completion in 1987.

Hejaz Railways (narrow gauge, 1,050 mm): 246 km in Syria; the historic railway to Medina is the subject of a reconstruction project jointly with Jordan and Saudi Arabia, but little progress has been made since the June 1967 war. Trains run from Damascus to Amman and a branch line of about 24 km from Damascus to Katana was opened in 1977.

General Organization of the Hejaz-Syrian Railway: BP 134, Hejaz St, Damascus; tel. 115815; Gen. Man. Eng. A. Ismail.

ROADS

Arterial roads run across the country linking the north to the south and the Mediterranean to the eastern frontier. The main arterial networks are as follows: Sidon (Lebanon)–Kuneitra–Sweida–Salkhad–Jordan border; Beirut (Lebanon)–Damascus–Khan Abu Chamat–Iraqi border–Baghdad; Tartous–Tell Kalakh–Homs–Palmyra; Banias–Hama–Salemie; Latakia–Aleppo–Rakka–Deir-ez-Zor–Abou Kemal–Iraqi border; Tripoli (Lebanon)–Tartous–Banias–Latakia; Turkish border–Antakya; Amman (Jordan)–Dera'a–Damascus–Homs–Hama–Aleppo–Azaz (Turkish border); Kuneitra–Damascus–Palmyra–Deir-ez-Zor–Hassetche–Qamishliya.

Asphalted roads: 13,000 km, macadam roads: 1,300 km, earth roads: 6,000 km.

Projects for the construction of a further 1,600 km of main roads are under way; the extended network is to improve links with the east of the country and with Iraq, Jordan, Lebanon and Turkey. Plans include the construction of a 104-km dual carriageway from Tartous to Tel Kotchak in Jordan, which is scheduled for completion in 1988 at a cost of US $127m.

General Co for Roads Construction: BP 493, Homs; tel. 20790; telex 441001; f. 1975.

PIPELINES

The oil pipelines which cross Syrian territory are of great importance to the national economy, representing a considerable source of foreign exchange. Iraq halted the flow of oil through the pipeline between Kirkuk and Banias in April 1976, but it was resumed in February 1979. Syria closed the pipeline in April 1982.

Following the Iraq Government's nationalization of the Iraq Petroleum Company, the Syrian Government nationalized the IPC's pipelines, pumping stations and other installations in Syria, setting up a new company to administer them:

Syrian Company for Oil Transport (SCOT): BP 13, Banias; tel. 22300; telex 441012; f. 1972; Dir-Gen. MUHAMMAD DOUBA.

SHIPPING

The port of Latakia is being developed and about 2,500 ships used the port in 1979; it is planned to increase the port's capacity to 5 million tons per year. A new port at Tartous is under construction.

Syrian Navigation Company: Baghdad St, BP 314, Latakia; tel. 33778; telex 451028; state-owned company operating three ships.

TANZANIA

Introductory Survey

Location, Climate, Language, Religion, Flag, Capital

The United Republic of Tanzania consists of Tanganyika, on the African mainland, and the nearby islands of Zanzibar and Pemba. Tanganyika lies on the east coast of Africa, bordered by Uganda and Kenya to the north, by Zaire to the west, and by Zambia, Malawi and Mozambique to the south. Zanzibar and Pemba are in the Indian Ocean, about 40 km (25 miles) off the coast of Tanganyika, north of Dar es Salaam. The climate varies with altitude, ranging from tropical in Zanzibar and on the coast and plains to semi-temperate in the highlands. The official languages are Swahili and English, and there are a number of tribal languages. There are Christian, Hindu and Muslim communities. Many Africans follow traditional beliefs. The national flag (proportions 3 by 2) comprises two triangles, one of green (with its base at the hoist and its apex in the upper fly) and the other of blue (with its base in the fly and its apex at the lower hoist), separated by a broad, yellow-edged dark brown diagonal stripe, from the lower hoist to the upper fly. The administrative functions of the capital are being transferred from Dar es Salaam to Dodoma. This transfer is due to be completed in 1990.

Recent History

Tanzania was formed in 1964 by a merger of the two independent states of Tanganyika and Zanzibar (see below).

Tanganyika became a German colony in 1884, and was later incorporated into German East Africa, which also included present-day Rwanda and Burundi. At the end of the First World War (1914–18), the German forces in the area surrendered. German rule was ended, and Tanganyika was placed under a League of Nations mandate, with the United Kingdom as the administering power. In 1946 Tanganyika became a UN Trust Territory, still under British rule. Tanganyika's first general election was held in two phases, in September 1958 and February 1959. A new Council of Ministers, including Africans for the first time, was formed in July 1959. At the next election, in September 1960, the Tanganyika African National Union (TANU) won 70 of the 71 seats in the National Assembly. The party's leader, Dr Julius Nyerere, became Chief Minister. Internal self-government was achieved in May 1961, when Dr Nyerere became Prime Minister. Tanganyika became independent, within the Commonwealth, on 9 December 1961, but Dr Nyerere resigned as Prime Minister in January 1962, barely six weeks after independence, to devote himself to the direction of TANU. His successor as Prime Minister was Rashidi Kawawa. On the first anniversary of independence, in December 1962, Tanganyika became a republic, with Dr Nyerere returning to power as the country's first President, having been elected in the previous month. Kawawa became Vice-President.

Zanzibar, a British protectorate since 1890, became an independent sultanate in December 1963. Following an armed uprising by the Afro-Shirazi Party in January 1964, the Sultan was deposed and a republic proclaimed. The new Government signed an Act of Union with Tanganyika in April 1964, thus creating the United Republic. The union was named Tanzania in October 1964 and became a one-party state in July 1965. At general elections in 1965, 1970, 1975 and 1980 President Nyerere was re-elected almost unanimously.

In April 1972 Sheikh Abeid Karume, leader of Zanzibar and First Vice-President of the United Republic, was assassinated. Aboud Jumbe, appointed his successor, reorganized the Government of the island in August 1972 by extending the powers of the Afro-Shirazi Party. Despite its incorporation in Tanzania, Zanzibar retains a separate administration which has ruthlessly suppressed all opposition, and in June 1980 a coup plot against Jumbe was thwarted. Elections for a 40-member Zanzibar Council of Representatives were held for the first time in January 1980. In 1983, however, there were several signs among Zanzibaris of dissatisfaction with the union with Tanganyika, and a growing campaign to give the island more autonomy culminated in the resignation in January 1984 of Jumbe and three of his ministers. Ali Hassan Mwinyi, a former Zanzibari Minister of Natural Resources and Tourism, was appointed interim President of the islands, and in April he was elected unopposed as President of Zanzibar, with 87.5% of the votes cast.

In February 1977 TANU and the Afro-Shirazi Party were amalgamated to form Chama Cha Mapinduzi (CCM), the Revolutionary Party of Tanzania, and in April the National Assembly approved a permanent constitution for Tanzania. At presidential and general elections in October 1980 Nyerere and Jumbe were overwhelmingly re-elected. However, about one-half of the elected members of the National Assembly, including several ministers, failed to retain their seats; this was seen as a protest against commodity shortages and inefficient bureaucracy. In November Edward Sokoine, Prime Minister since 1977, resigned on health grounds and was replaced by Cleopa Msuya; the former was reappointed Prime Minister in February 1983. Several officials, including two ministers, were dismissed in January 1981 for inefficiency and corruption. Similar dismissals continued in 1981, and a Cabinet reshuffle in February 1982 followed a wide-ranging reorganization of the CCM administrative structure. During 1983 a large-scale operation against 'economic saboteurs', accused of smuggling and hoarding, led to hundreds of arrests and the introduction of new legislation against economic crimes. Although Nyerere appears to face no serious challenge from within Tanzania, the hijack to the United Kingdom in February 1982 of an Air Tanzania internal flight drew attention to the existence of dissident opinion, while in January 1983 a number of civilians and soldiers were arrested and charged with plotting a coup. The accused were held in indefinite detention. Two escaped, but one of these, a former Air Tanzania pilot, was eventually extradited from Kenya, where he had sought political asylum. Charges of high treason were brought against 19 of the group, and committal proceedings began in September 1984.

In March 1984 President Nyerere reaffirmed his intention to step down at the end of his term in 1985. Edward Sokoine had been widely expected to be his successor, but he was killed in a road accident in April 1984. He was replaced as Prime Minister by Salim A. Salim, another possible future presidential candidate (together with Ali Hassan Mwinyi and Rashidi Kawawa). Major changes to the Constitution were approved by the National Assembly in October 1984, limiting the President's powers and increasing those of the National Assembly. A new Constitution for Zanzibar came into force in January 1985, providing for much more representative government and a new legal system allowing defence lawyers and the right of appeal, for the first time since 1970.

Tanzania gave active support to the Mozambique Liberation Front (Frelimo) in its fight for an independent Mozambique, as it has done for other national liberation movements in the southern continent, and the two countries co-operate closely on the basis of a common socialist ideology. In 1976 a joint commission was established to improve political, economic and cultural ties between them. Relations with Zambia, strengthened after the re-routing of much of the latter's trade through Tanzania after Rhodesia (now Zimbabwe) closed its border in 1973, were consolidated when the Chinese-built Tanzanian-Zambian railway (Tazara) began service in 1975.

Relations with Uganda and Kenya were uneasy throughout the 1970s, particularly after the dissolution of the East African Community (EAC) in 1977. In April 1979 Tanzanian regular troops supported the Uganda National Liberation Front in the overthrow of President Amin. Up to 20,000 Tanzanian troops remained in Uganda during much of 1979 and 1980, at considerable financial cost to Tanzania. The border with Kenya, which had been closed since 1977, was reopened in November 1983. Tanzania had been reluctant to normalize relations or to enter into new regional economic agreements, hence its refusal to participate in 1981 in the Lusaka Agreement for an 18-nation preferential trade area covering East and Central Africa. The reopening of the Kenyan border followed agreement, after six years of intermittent negotiations, on the distribution of the EAC's assets and liabilities. In 1984 the two countries agreed in principle to use local currencies for bilateral trade, their airlines resumed inter-state flights, and agreements were signed on overland transport. Tanzania is a member of the Southern Africa Development Co-ordination Conference (SADCC, see p. 205).

Government

Tanzania is a one-party state. Under the provisions of the 1965 Constitution, with subsequent amendments, legislative power is held by the unicameral National Assembly, whose members serve for a term of five years. There is constitutional provision for both elected members (chosen by direct universal suffrage) and nominated members. Following the adoption of constitutional amendments, approved by the National Assembly in October 1984, the number of nominated members was reduced to less than that of directly-elected members. There are 100 constituencies on the mainland and in some cases these will now be able to elect more than one member. The Electoral Commission will decide on these numbers in a review which will take place before every general election. Up to 60 members will come from Zanzibar, five of whom will be elected by the Zanzibar House of Representatives. The President of Tanzania will nominate up to 15 members, of whom there must be at least five each from the mainland and the islands. There will also be 15 nominated women members, in addition to members nominated by the 'mass organizations', the 25 Regional Commissioners and one member from each Region. The First Vice-President must represent Zanzibar if the President comes from the mainland, and vice versa. Executive power lies with the President, elected by popular vote for five years. Under the 1984 amendments, the President must be at least 40 years of age and his term is limited to a maximum of two five-year periods. The President appoints two Vice-Presidents, one of whom is President of Zanzibar and the other Prime Minister of the Union. The President selects the Cabinet in consultation with the Prime Minister. The President has the right to declare war, or a state of emergency, but only with the approval of a joint session of the National Assembly and the party's National Executive Committee. The 1984 amendments provide for a special parliamentary committee to advise the President, a specific affirmation in the Constitution of the National Assembly's authority to supervise the Government, and an increased number of constituencies on the mainland, especially in the larger regions. A single presidential candidate is nominated by the ruling party, Chama Cha Mapinduzi, whose leading organ is the National Executive Committee, elected by party members.

Zanzibar has its own administration for internal affairs and a separate constitution for the islands was adopted in October 1979, with provisions for an elected President and a Council of Representatives elected by party members. The amended Zanzibar Constitution, which came into force in January 1985, provides for the President, elected by universal adult suffrage, to hold office for a maximum of two five-year terms, and for the House of Representatives, of 45–55 members, to be directly elected by universal adult suffrage. The President of Zanzibar appoints the Chief Minister, and the two will co-operate in choosing the other members of the Revolutionary Council, which will have up to 20 members. The members representing Zanzibar in the Union Parliament will also be elected from among the members of the House of Representatives, by universal adult suffrage.

Defence

Total armed forces numbered 40,350 in July 1984, of whom an estimated 38,500 were in the army, 850 in the navy and 1,000 in the air force. There are also paramilitary forces consisting of a 1,400-strong Police Field Force and a 50,000-strong Citizens' Militia. In 1982/83 defence expenditure totalled an estimated 3,000m. shillings.

Economic Affairs

The economy is mainly agricultural and much of the farming is at subsistence level. Agriculture employs about 90% of the economically active population and accounts for 30%–40% of GDP. More than one-half of agricultural production is subsistence output.

In 1970 the Government initiated a communal ujamaa ('familyhood') village scheme, with a view to raising rural standards of living and agricultural production and developing local industries. This programme was accelerated in 1973, when about 200 medium- and small-scale farms were nationalized. There are over 8,000 registered villages, holding more than 90% of the rural population, although only a small proportion are ujamaa. In December 1980 it was announced that the responsibility for collecting food and export crops, and for distributing agricultural inputs, was to be returned from state enterprises to peasant-run co-operatives to increase production of foreign-exchange earning export crops, which seriously declined in 1980 and, aggravated by severe drought, again in 1981–83. In 1984 plans were announced to dissolve some of the parastatal organizations, to reorganize or amalgamate others, and to remove all government subsidies, in an attempt to increase efficiency and to prevent the nationalized bodies from continuing to accumulate huge arrears on debt repayments.

The main cash crops and export earners are coffee, tea, cotton, sisal, pyrethrum, tobacco and cashew nuts, though farmers have been encouraged to concentrate on essential food crops, principally cassava and maize. Earnings from coffee, which provides nearly one-third of foreign exchange earnings, declined from 1,360m. shillings in 1980/81 to 1,090m. shillings in 1981/82, owing mainly to lower world coffee prices, but subsequently improved, to 1,898m. shillings in 1983/84, despite lower output (caused by lack of pesticides and by drought). The EEC is financing a long-term coffee rehabilitation programme to increase both yields and area, but scope for expanding coffee exports is limited by Tanzania's quota under the International Coffee Agreement (ICA). The surplus, after this quota is met, has to be sold on the world market, at prices generally well below the minimum ICA level. Following the announcement in 1983 of a national food development programme (costing 69,900m. shillings), it was planned that Tanzania would be self-sufficient in food by 1990, and would be able to export surplus grain thereafter. Between 1971/72 and 1982/83 Tanzania's export crops declined by 40% in volume, and this has been one of the main causes of the country's severe economic crisis, together with deteriorating terms of trade (with world prices for Tanzania's main exports remaining low, while the prices of imported fuel, machinery and manufactured goods have soared since the early 1970s). Imports of staple grain have risen sharply since 1979, to meet domestic demand. Other cash crops include sugar, cardamom and groundnuts. Cloves are grown on the islands, mostly on Pemba, and account for 80% of Zanzibar's foreign exchange earnings.

There is a small minerals sector, including diamonds and other gemstones, and there are plans to revitalize gold mining after its decline in the 1960s. Phosphates from Minjingu, in the north, are now supplying the Tanga fertilizer plant. Some salt is exported, there is small-scale tin mining, and studies have been made on nickel deposits in the north-west. There are iron ore reserves, estimated at 130m. metric tons, at Chunya and Liganga in the south-west of the country, and an estimated 200m. tons of coal, discovered at nearby Ketewaka-Mchuchuma, are to be exploited with assistance from the People's Republic of China. Coal is already mined at Ilima. A West German company was granted exclusive uranium prospecting rights in 1979. Prospecting for petroleum and natural gas is being carried out off shore and in the south of the country. There are estimated offshore gas reserves of 41,000m. cu. m near Songo Songo island, and 130,000m. cu. m at Kimbiji, 40 km south-east of Dar es Salaam. There is a petroleum refinery at Dar es Salaam, with an annual capacity of 750,000 metric tons.

The industrial sector is small and dominated by parastatal enterprises, many of which are proving inefficient and unprofitable. The most important industries are food processing, textiles, brewing and cigarette manufacture, though other basic industries are being developed. State investment has been directed at the sugar industry, textiles, tanneries, pulp and paper, fertilizers, cement, sisal and cashew nut processing, and small rural industries are being stimulated. Energy is a major problem, and petroleum imports (about 700,000 metric tons of crude oil and 250,000 tons of refined products per year) absorb about 60% of Tanzania's foreign exchange earnings. Completion of the new 80 MW hydroelectric station at Mtera dam, part of the Kidatu complex on the Great Ruaha river, will bring total electricity generating capacity to 519 MW, of which 339 MW will be hydropower. Fewer than 10% of the population have access to electricity. Tourism is an important potential growth sector: a programme to modernize hotels and services is under way, at a cost of US $42m. (partly funded by the World Bank), and prospects were further boosted in 1983 by the reopening in November of the border with Kenya.

The third five-year development plan, which started in 1977, gave priority to industry, mining and agriculture, and set a 6% target for annual growth in real GDP, which was not achieved. The fourth plan was to have run from 1981 to 1986, and envisaged total investment of 40,200m. shillings and an average annual growth of 6%, but the worsening economic crisis led to its abandonment. It was replaced by the National Economic Survival Programme, which, in its turn, was superseded in 1982 by a three-year structural adjustment programme, drawn up with World Bank assistance and concentrating on the consolidation of existing projects rather than on new ones, and on boosting Tanzania's earnings of foreign exchange. Successive budgets containing strict cost-cutting measures and increased indirect taxation have been introduced since 1979 in attempts to halt the economic decline, which had been accelerated by the invasion of Uganda. The 1983/84 budget placed new emphasis on agriculture, with 24% of expenditure allotted to agricultural development. The economy is heavily dependent on foreign aid: in 1983/84 multilateral and bilateral donors provided an estimated 7,600m. shillings, of which almost one-half was in the form of grants. After the Tanzanian authorities made pledges of increased production and export efficiency, and reduced government expenditure, a stand-by credit was arranged with the IMF in August 1980. However, this was withdrawn when Tanzania resisted the demands for massive devaluation and other measures which were incompatible with the Government's socialist strategy. In June 1983 the shilling was finally devalued by 20% against the US dollar. In October 1981 the World Bank, which had suspended loans to Tanzania in June because of repayment arrears, advised the Government to introduce an austerity programme. World Bank loans covering 43 development projects were resumed in October 1982, when repayment arrears were cleared. The 1984/85 budget introduced some radical changes, demonstrating Tanzania's willingness to meet the demands of the IMF and the World Bank. The shilling was devalued by a further 26%, subsidies were removed from maizemeal (the staple food) and from pesticides and fertilizers, producer prices were raised by 40%–57%, and charges were introduced for secondary education. The minimum monthly wage was increased, to offset the effect of higher maizemeal price on urban families. By the end of 1983, the total external public debt was estimated at US $ 2,500m., with the World Bank as the largest creditor. Foreign exchange reserves, US $275m. after the 1977 coffee boom, fell to as low as US $1.2m. during 1981, subsequently recovering slightly, to reach US $20.6m. at the end of 1983, but falling to US $13.9m. three months later. Tanzania's GDP declined by 1.2% in 1983, after a 3.2% fall in 1982. Real income per head is estimated to have fallen by over 8% between 1978 and 1982, to about US $280, making Tanzania one of the 25 poorest countries in the world.

Transport and Communications

Tanzania has 2,600 km of railways and 9,500 km of classified roads. In addition, the Chinese-built Tanzanian-Zambian railway (Tazara), with a length of 1,860 km, links Dar es Salaam with the Zambian copperbelt. Sweden, the World Bank and the International Development Association are financing the rebuilding of 500 km of the Tanzam Highway, a 1,930-km road running from central Zambia to Dar es Salaam. Among other major road schemes is the 215-km Songea–Makambako road in the south-west, at present the largest British aid-funded project in Africa, and the Japanese-funded Kibiti–Lindi road in the south-east. The three main seaports are Dar es Salaam, Tanga and Mtwara, while the chief port on Lake Victoria is Mwanza. There are international airports at Dar es Salaam, Zanzibar and Kilimanjaro. Air services link Tanzania's principal towns. Following the collapse of East African Airways early in 1977, a national airline, Air Tanzania, was established. There are also private and charter services.

Social Welfare

The state-sponsored Rural Development Division exists to improve educational, labour and health conditions in small communities. The state operates hospitals and health centres, while Christian missions also provide medical care. In 1977 Tanganyika had 2,407 hospital establishments, with 33,714 beds, and 960 physicians. In 1980 there were 17,560 people for every one physician and 2,980 for every nursing person, compared with 18,220 and 11,890 respectively in 1960. In June 1980 privately-owned medical facilities were nationalized.

Education

Education at primary level is free. In secondary schools a government-stipulated fee is paid. Villages are encouraged to build their own schools with government assistance. Almost all primary schools are government-owned. Universal primary education was introduced in November 1977, and was made compulsory by the Education Act of October 1978. As a result, 93% of children receive primary education for seven years, but only about 4% of those who complete primary schooling receive secondary education. A National Education Commission was set up in 1981 to review education in Tanzania since independence, and to plan policy for the next 20 years. Adult literacy rose from 33% in 1967 to about 85% in 1984, as the result of an adult literary campaign in 1970–75. The University of Dar es Salaam had approximately 3,780 students in 1982. Tanzania also has three national vocational training centres.

Tourism

The principal tourist attractions are the scenery and wildlife. The famous Serengeti National Park contains a great variety of game, and safari-parties come from all over the world. Mount Kilimanjaro is the highest mountain in Africa. The other main game parks and reserves are at Lake Manyara and Ngorongoro in the north, and Selous, Ruaha and Mikumi in the south. A programme to rehabilitate the tourism sector began in 1982. Tanzania received 71,000 foreign visitors in 1982.

Public Holidays

1985: 1 May (International Labour Day), 20 June (Idd El Fitr, end of Ramadan), 7 July (Saba Saba Peasants' Day), 27 August (Idd El Haji, Feast of the Sacrifice), 25 November (Maulidi, Birth of the Prophet), 9 December (Independence Day), 25 December (Christmas).

1986: 12 January (Zanzibar Revolution Day), 5 February (Chama Cha Mapinduzi Day), 28–31 March (Easter), 26 April (Union Day).

Directory

The Constitution

The United Republic of Tanzania was established on 26 April 1964, when Tanganyika and Zanzibar, hitherto separate independent countries, merged. An Interim Constitution of 1965 made provisional constitutional arrangements for the union and defined the legislative, executive and judicial organs of the government. The President is the Head of State, Head of the Government and Commander-in-Chief of the Armed Forces. The Prime Minister is responsible for the conduct of government business.

In June 1975 the National Assembly passed an Interim Constitution Amendment Bill which officially incorporated the fundamental principles of socialism and self-reliance into the constitution and gave legal supremacy to the Tanganyika African National Union (TANU) as the national political party on the mainland. On 5 February 1977 a new party, Chama Cha Mapinduzi (CCM), was formed following the amalgamation of TANU and the Afro-Shirazi Party which operated in Zanzibar and Pemba. This party has adopted responsibility for all political activity and state functions. On 25 April 1977 the National Assembly approved a permanent constitution, based on freedom, justice, brotherliness and peace and incorporating principles of human equality, socialism, self-reliance and democracy. The Revolutionary Council of Zanzibar adopted a separate constitution in October 1979, with provisions for a popularly elected President and a Council of Representatives elected by CCM delegates. A Bill to amend the Tanzanian constitution accordingly was tabled in January 1980. Further amendments, approved in October 1984, increased the powers of the National Assembly, and included major changes in its composition. The provisions below relate to the 1965 constitution, as subsequently amended.

GOVERNMENT

Legislative power is exercised by the Parliament of the United Republic, which is vested by the Constitution with complete sovereign power, and of which the present National Assembly is the legislative house. The Assembly also enacts all legislation concerning the mainland. Internal matters in Zanzibar are the exclusive jurisdiction of the Zanzibar executive, the Revolutionary Council of Zanzibar.

National Assembly

Under the provisions of the 1984 constitutional amendments, the National Assembly comprises a maximum of 216 members: 101 members directly elected from the mainland; up to 55 members directly elected from the islands; five members elected by the Zanzibar House of Representatives from among its own members; 15 seats allocated to women deputies; 15 members nominated by the President; and 25 ex officio members (Regional Commissioners).

President

The President has no power to legislate without recourse to Parliament. The assent of the President is required before any Bill passed by the National Assembly becomes law. Should the President withhold his assent and the Bill be repassed by the National Assembly by a two-thirds majority, the President is required by law to give his assent within 21 days unless, before that time, he has dissolved the National Assembly, in which case he must stand for re-election.

The Presidential candidate is chosen by an electoral convention of Chama Cha Mapinduzi. If the convention's first choice is rejected by a majority of the voters, another candidate must be chosen and submitted to the vote.

To assist him in carrying out his functions the President appoints two Vice-Presidents from the elected members of the National Assembly. If the President comes from the mainland, the first Vice-President must come from Zanzibar, and vice versa. The leader of government business in the Assembly is Second Vice-President and is appointed by the President from the members of the Assembly. The Vice-Presidents and ministers comprise the Cabinet, which is presided over by the President.

Members of Parliament

Members of Parliament are elected for five years unless the President dissolves Parliament at an earlier date.

In each constituency the official party puts forward two candidates chosen by the party membership. There is universal adult suffrage.

Political Party

A national conference of Chama Cha Mapinduzi elects the Chairman, Vice-Chairman and Secretary-General of the Party. The National Executive Committee (NEC) of the Party has a total membership of 172: 130 elected by the national conference, 10 chosen by the NEC from a list presented by the Chairman, 25 regional party chairmen, five chairmen of mass organizations, the Chairman and Vice-Chairman of the Party. The NEC also elects an 18-member Central Committee. The Party is regarded as the instrument through which Tanzania's socialist aims will be realized.

JUDICIARY

The independence of the judges is secured by provisions which prevent their removal, except on account of misbehaviour or incapacity when they may be dismissed at the discretion of the President. The Constitution also makes provision for a Permanent Commission of Enquiry which has wide powers to investigate any abuses of authority.

CONSTITUTIONAL AMENDMENTS

The Constitution can be amended by an act of the Parliament of the United Republic, when the proposed amendment is supported by the votes of not fewer than two-thirds of all the members of the Assembly.

CO-OPERATIVES

The co-operative movement has made considerable incursions into the transport, distribution and retail trade. 'Operation Maduka', begun in 1976, aimed to replace private shops in or near State farms, industries and ujamaa villages by co-operatives. In 1976 there were 879 co-operative shops and 2,191 ujamaa shops.

The rural co-operatives were dissolved in 1976. Crop purchasing and the distribution of agricultural inputs were taken over by the National Milling Corporation (food crops) and a number of national authorities, set up for each of the main cash crops. In May 1982 legislation was introduced to re-establish the rural co-operatives, with the state crop authorities retaining only importing and exporting functions, as part of an overall move towards decentralization. The first to be reinstated, the Kilimanjaro Native Co-operative Union (1984) and nine others, were due to start purchasing in 1984/85.

There are some 1,670 primary marketing societies under the aegis of about 20 regional co-operative unions. The Co-operative Union of Tanzania is the national organization (affiliated with the ruling CCM party) to which all unions belong.

THAILAND

Introductory Survey

Location, Climate, Language, Religion, Flag, Capital

The Kingdom of Thailand lies in South-East Asia. It is bordered to the west and north by Burma, to the north-east by Laos and to the south-east by Kampuchea. Thailand extends southward, along the isthmus of Kra, to the Malay Peninsula, where it borders Malaysia. The isthmus, shared with Burma, gives Thailand a short coastline on the Indian Ocean, and the country also has a long Pacific coastline on the Gulf of Thailand. The climate is tropical and humid, with an average annual temperature of 29°C (85°F). There are three main seasons: hot, rainy and cool. Temperatures in Bangkok are generally between 20°C (68°F) and 35°C (95°F). The national language is Thai, and there are small minorities of Chinese, Malays and indigenous hill peoples. The predominant religion is Buddhism, mainly of the Hinayana (Theravada) form. About 4% of the population, mainly Malays, are Muslims, and there is also a Christian minority, mainly in Bangkok and the north. The national flag (proportions 3 by 2) has five horizontal stripes, of red, white, blue, white and red, the central blue stripe being twice as wide as each of the others. The capital is Bangkok.

Recent History

Formerly known as Siam, Thailand took its present name in 1939. The army seized power in a coup in 1947, and Field Marshal Pibul Songgram took control. His influence declined during the 1950s and he was overthrown in 1957 in a bloodless coup, led by Field Marshal Sarit Thanarat. Elections were held but in 1958 martial law was declared and all political parties were dissolved. Sarit died in December 1963 and was succeeded as Prime Minister by Gen. (later Field Marshal) Thanom Kittikachorn, who had been Deputy Prime Minister since 1959. A constitution was introduced in June 1968 but in November 1971, following a rise in communist insurgency and internal political unrest, Field Marshal Thanom annulled the constitution, dissolved the National Assembly and declared martial law. Student riots, culminating in bloodshed, brought down the Government in October 1973. An interim government was formed under Dr Sanya Dharmasakti, the President of the Privy Council and a former Chief Justice of the Supreme Court. A new constitution, legalizing political parties, was promulgated in October 1974. In January 1975 42 parties took part in free elections for the new House of Representatives. A coalition government was formed in February by the Democratic Party leader, Seni Pramoj, but this administration was defeated by a vote of 'no confidence' in March 1975.

A new right-wing coalition government, headed by the Social Action Party (SAP) leader, Kukrit Pramoj (brother of Seni), was unable to maintain its unity, and Kukrit resigned in January 1976. General elections, held in April, resulted in the formation of a four-party coalition, with Seni as Prime Minister. Following violent student demonstrations in October, the Seni Government was dissolved, and a right-wing military junta, led by Adm. Sa'ngad Chaloryoo, seized power, calling itself the National Administrative Reform Council (NARC). Martial law was declared, the 1974 constitution annulled, the legislature dissolved, political parties were banned and strict press censorship was imposed. A new constitution was promulgated, providing for the NARC to become the Prime Minister's Advisory Council. A new civilian Council of Ministers was announced, with Thanin Kraivixien, a Supreme Court judge, as Prime Minister.

In October 1977 the Thanin Government was overthrown in a bloodless coup by a Revolutionary Council of military leaders, almost identical to the NARC that had brought it to power. The 1976 Constitution was abrogated. In November an interim constitution was promulgated. The King appointed a new Prime Minister, Gen. Kriangsak Chomanan, Supreme Commander of the Armed Forces and Secretary-General of the National Policy Council (NPC), formerly the Revolutionary Council. The King also nominated a National Legislative Assembly (NLA) on the advice of the NPC's chairman. In December 1978 the NLA approved a new Constitution (see below under Government). The ban on political gatherings, imposed in 1976, was lifted in January 1979, and elections to a new House of Representatives were held in April. The nominated members of the Senate, appointed on the Prime Minister's recommendation, were almost all military officers. Thus Gen. Kriangsak remained Prime Minister and formed a new Council of Ministers, after which the NPC was dissolved. The Council of Ministers was affected by increasing political tensions. Opposition to Gen. Kriangsak continued, and in March 1980 he resigned. The Defence Minister, Gen. Prem Tinsulanonda, was appointed Prime Minister, and a new Council of Ministers was formed.

Initially, Gen. Prem's coalition government appeared to lack authority, and in April 1981 an abortive coup was staged by a group of disillusioned army colonels. The bloodless coup attempt ended after three days, when the King publicly confirmed his support for Gen. Prem. Following strong opposition, nearly all the rebels surrendered. In December 1981 Gen. Prem carried out a ministerial reshuffle, reincorporating the SAP, which had previously been excluded from the Council of Ministers (in a reshuffle in March), in order to repulse a challenge from the new National Democracy Party, established by the former Prime Minister, Gen. Kriangsak.

In February 1983 a series of constitutional amendments, backed by army leaders (predominantly Gen. Arthit Kamlang-Ek, Supreme Commander of the Armed Forces), with the aim of preserving the central role of the armed forces in Thai politics by allowing military and government officials to hold ministerial posts, as well as extending the legislative powers of former and present appointed members of the Senate who were also in the armed forces, narrowly failed to achieve the necessary majority at its final consideration by a joint session of the National Assembly. The King announced the dissolution of the National Assembly in March, and a general election was held in April, two months before it was originally scheduled and three days before the provisional clauses of the current constitution lapsed. No single party won an overall majority, and a coalition was formed between the SAP, Prachakorn Thai, the Democratic Party and the National Democracy Party. Chart Thai, despite being the party with the largest number of seats, formed the opposition. General Prem was again elected Prime Minister.

The attempt to increase military dominance in the National Assembly was renewed in November 1984, following the devaluation of the baht by 14.8%. This measure was strongly opposed by Gen. Arthit and four other senior military officers, who criticized the Government, calling for a revaluation of the baht and a ministerial reshuffle, with the underlying threat of the withdrawal of military support of the coalition Government. General Prem stood firm, however, and the political crisis was resolved when, as a compromise, he agreed to readjust the national budget to compensate the armed forces for the higher costs incurred as a result of the devaluation, which had threatened purchases of foreign armaments. General Arthit lost much of his earlier support, and was obliged to withdraw his demands and to drop any further action. He also appeared to have fallen from favour as the likely successor to Gen. Prem, who emerged with his position strengthened.

The Government has succeeded in reducing the strength of the outlawed Communist Party of Thailand, and since 1981 several thousand guerrillas have surrendered to the authorities, following the offer of an amnesty.

In foreign policy during the 1960s, close to the battleground in Indo-China, Thailand committed itself to the US camp. After 1975, however, Thailand sought closer ties with its communist neighbours. Following the Vietnamese invasion of Kampuchea in December 1978, relations deteriorated considerably. The Thai Government recognized the new coalition government-in-exile of Kampuchea, which is supported by the UN, and joins the other ASEAN countries in condemning the presence of foreign forces there.

The Kampuchean border refugee camps continue to be the centre of mutual recriminations (see Kampuchea, p. 1954). Since 1975 Thailand has sheltered nearly 600,000 refugees, of whom about one-half are Kampucheans. In mid-1984 the number of Indochinese refugees was about 125,000, the lowest level since 1979. From 1979 Thailand imposed restrictions on the influx of refugees, a move interpreted as disruptive by the new regime in Kampuchea, and several military incursions by the Vietnamese into Thailand have followed. The proximity of the annual dry-season fighting in Kampuchea, between Vietnamese troops and Kampuchean guerrilla groups opposed to the Vietnamese-backed regime there, keeps Thai forces on continuous alert at the Kampuchean border. In 1984/85 the Vietnamese launched their heaviest offensive yet against the Kampuchean guerrilla forces and captured all of the guerrilla bases along the border. Many thousands of refugees fled into Thailand. Thai forces were involved in frequent clashes with Vietnamese troops, whom they have accused of intrusion into Thai territory. The Thai Government has strengthened its links with the USA, which promises military and economic assistance.

Government

Under the terms of the constitution promulgated in December 1978, the King is Head of State and Head of the Thai Armed Forces. The King appoints the Prime Minister, on the advice of the National Assembly, and the Council of Ministers, on the advice of the Prime Minister. The King may dismiss members of the Council of Ministers on the advice of the Prime Minister. The bicameral National Assembly comprises a House of Representatives, containing 324 members elected by universal adult suffrage for four years (subject to dissolution), and a Senate appointed for a six-year term by the King on the recommendation of the incumbent Prime Minister. Martial law was declared in October 1976 and remained in force in 1985, although some martial law powers had been relaxed.

Defence

The armed forces totalled 235,300 in July 1984: army 160,000, navy 32,200, air force 43,100. There are paramilitary forces of 72,000. Military service lasts two years between the ages of 21 and 30. In 1984/85 estimated defence expenditure amounted to 41,421.6m. baht.

Economic Affairs

The economy is predominantly agricultural, with more than one-quarter of the total area of the country under cultivation. In 1983 the agricultural sector (including forestry and fishing) provided 21.8% of Thailand's gross domestic product (GDP), and in 1982 it employed 68.4% of the working population. The principal crop is rice, of which Thailand is the world's main exporter. The annual harvest of paddy rice totalled 18.6m. metric tons in 1983, compared with 17.2m. tons in 1982. In 1982 there was a record exportable surplus of 3.78m. tons, but export earnings fell by 14.6%, to 22,510m. baht. In 1983 export volume fell to 3.48m. tons, and earnings declined to an estimated 20,157m. baht. Nevertheless, rice remained Thailand's principal export commodity in 1983 (accounting for nearly 14% of total export earnings), followed by cassava (tapioca) products, of which 90% are bought by EEC countries, and rubber, of which Thailand is the world's third largest producer. In 1983 the country's output of natural rubber increased by 1.2%, to 555,060 metric tons, while export earnings rose by 24.2%, to 11,787m. baht. Other important crops include maize, sugar cane and kenaf, of which maize was the only commodity to increase production in 1983.

The manufacturing sector contributed 18.6% of GDP in 1983. The principal industries are textiles, cement, sugar and petroleum refining. The small mining sector contributed 1.8% of GDP in 1983. The most valuable mineral is tin, of which Thailand is the world's second largest producer (after Malaysia). Tin accounted for 82% of Thailand's mining production in 1982, and tin exports earned 5,265m. baht in 1983, representing a fall of 32.3% from 1982, owing to export restrictions by the International Tin Council. Thailand is heavily dependent on imported petroleum. In 1973 imports of petroleum and petroleum products accounted for 11% of the total value of imports, but by 1982 the proportion was 30.9%. This fell to 24.1%, or 57,071m. baht, in 1983. However, petroleum deposits have been discovered in the west and centre of the country. Also, reserves of natural gas have been found in the Gulf of Thailand, particularly the Erawan field, and have been in commercial use since 1981. The Government hopes that exploitation of this gas will reduce the country's dependence on imported petroleum from about 70% of total energy requirements in 1983 to 45% in 1990.

Measures that were introduced by the Government in 1978 to restrict the growth of imports, and to reduce the current deficit on Thailand's balance of payments, have met with mixed success. The current deficit was reduced from 56,049m. baht in 1981 to 23,138m. baht in 1982, but increased by nearly 183%, to 65,400m. baht, in 1983. The trade deficit was successfully reduced by 42.1% to 36,888m. baht, in 1982, but rose by 144.4% to a record 90,137m. baht, in 1983, owing mainly to the continuing high cost of petroleum imports. The total value of imports decreased by 9.3% in 1982, the first drop for 23 years, while exports increased by 4.4%, but this trend was reversed in 1983, when imports rose by 20.3% and exports fell by 8.3%. Thailand's principal trading partners are Japan and the USA, which in 1983 accounted for 22.7% and 13.5% respectively of total trade.

Thailand's GDP grew, in real terms, by 5.8% in 1980, by 7.6% in 1981 and by 4.1% in 1982, the lowest rate for 20 years. The rate of growth improved to 5.8% in 1983 and fell slightly, to an estimated 5.5%, in 1984. Reserves of foreign exchange increased from $1,509m. in November 1983 to $2,094m. in November 1984. The annual rate of inflation averaged 19.7% in 1980, but fell to 12.7% in 1981, to 5.2% in 1982, to 3.8% in 1983 and an estimated 1.2% in 1984. In July 1981 the baht was devalued by 8.7% against the US dollar in an attempt to reduce the current account deficit and to narrow the trade deficit. The baht was devalued again, by 14.8%, in November 1984 and was 'floated' against a 'basket' of major currencies. Other measures included the abolition of a 20% surcharge on many imported products, the elimination of export duty on a number of items and the imposition of price controls on several essential goods, to prevent higher inflation. Unemployment was officially estimated at 5.6% of the labour force in 1981, compared with 5.4% in 1980.

The fifth National Economic and Social Development Plan (1982–86) had a target annual growth rate of 6.6% and aimed to promote small industries, placing emphasis on agriculturally-based and light manufacturing concerns. In a mid-term review of the fifth Plan in 1984, the annual growth rate was revised down to 5.5%, and slower export growth was predicted. The Plan also stressed the need to improve the conditions of the many people living in extreme poverty. A scheme that was introduced in 1980, inviting foreign multinational companies to invest (unchecked) in activities previously limited to the Thai public sector, has led to improvements in social and economic conditions. Several large loans have enabled Thailand to undertake many development projects and have put it among the 'middle-income' developing countries.

Transport and Communications

There were 3,825 km of state railways in 1984. Thailand had 30,016 km of main and secondary roads at the end of 1981. The first Bangkok overhead expressway was completed in 1981, and additional expressways are also planned. There is an extensive network of canals, providing transport for bulk goods. The port of Bangkok is an important ocean junction in South-East Asia. A large-scale development of two main ports is due to be completed in 1986. Don Muang airport (near Bangkok), Chiang Mai, Haadyai and Phuket airports are of international standards.

Social Welfare

Among the social services that are carried out by the Department of Public Welfare are child welfare, family assistance, welfare for the aged, the disabled, the destitute and socially handicapped women, disaster relief, welfare and development programmes for the hill tribes and self-help land settlements. In 1982 Thailand had 408 hospitals, several thousand clinics, more than 8,000 physicans, of whom 4,000 worked in Bangkok, and 15,036 nurses.

Education

Education is officially compulsory for seven years, to be undertaken between seven and 15 years of age. Primary education begins at the age of seven and lasts for six years. Secondary education, beginning at 13 years of age, also lasts for six years, divided into two equal cycles. In 1982 the total enrolment at primary and secondary schools was equivalent to 64% of all school-age children (96% at primary schools; 29% at secondary schools). There are 23 universities. Adult illiteracy declined from 18.2% in 1970 to 12.0% (males 7.7%; females 16.0%) in 1980.

Tourism

Thailand is noted for its temples, palaces and pagodas. The Royal Palaces of Bangkok are world famous. The number of tourists in 1983 was 2,191,003, and tourist expenditure totalled 25,060m. baht. Tourism is the country's largest source of foreign exchange.

Public Holidays

1985: 5 May (Coronation Day), 9 May (Ploughing Ceremony), 2 June (Visakhabuja), 31 July (Asalhabuja), 1 August (beginning of Buddhist Lent), 12 August (Queen's Birthday), 23 October (Chulalongkorn Day), 5 December (King's Birthday), 10 December (Constitution Day), 31 December (New Year's Eve).

1986: 1 January (New Year's Day), February* (Makhabuja), April* (Chakri Day and Songkran Festival).

* Regulated by the Buddhist calendar.

Weights and Measures

The metric system is in force, but a number of traditional measures are also used.

100 satangs = 1 baht.

Exchange rates (31 December 1984):
£1 sterling = 31.47 baht;

Directory

The Constitution

The present Constitution was promulgated on 22 December 1978. It consists of 206 sections in 11 provisions, and one transitory provision which ended in April 1983. A summary of the main provisions follows:

THE KING

Thailand is a Kingdom, one and indivisible. The King is Head of State and is head of the armed forces. Sovereignty rests with the people and the King exercises such power only in conformity with the provisions of the Constitution. The King exercises legislative power through the National Assembly, executive power through the Council of Ministers and judicial power through the courts. The person of the King is sacred and shall not be violated, accused or sued in any way. The King appoints the President of the Privy Council and not more than 14 other Privy Councillors. The Privy Council has the duty to advise the King on all matters pertaining to his functions.

THE NATIONAL ASSEMBLY

The National Assembly has the duty to consider and approve Bills. The Assembly is a bicameral legislature, with 243 members of the Senate appointed by the King, on the recommendation of the incumbent Prime Minister, and 324 members of the House of Representatives elected by the people. A Senator must have Thai nationality by birth and be 35 years of age or older and his term of office is six years. A Senator must not be a member of any political party. A Representative must be a Thai national by birth and be 25 years of age or older and a member of a political party. His term of office is four years. The King may dissolve the House of Representatives for a new election of members to the House. Members of the Senate and the House of Representatives are immune from prosecution in voting or expressing opinions during sittings of the National Assembly. At a sitting of the Senate or the House of Representatives, the presence of not less than one-half of the total number of members of each House is required to constitute a quorum. The President of the Senate acts as President of the National Assembly. The Assembly is vested with the power to control the administration of state affairs and to give approval.

THE COUNCIL OF MINISTERS

The King appoints a Prime Minister, the Royal Command being countersigned by the President of the National Assembly. He also appoints not more than 44 Ministers to constitute the Council of Ministers on the advice of the Prime Minister. The King may remove a Minister on the advice of the Prime Minister. The Prime Minister and Ministers may not be a government employee or a member of the armed forces, nor hold any position in a private undertaking which operates its business for profit. The Prime Minister and Ministers may speak at meetings of the National Assembly but may not vote.

EMERGENCY POWERS

The King may enact Royal Decrees which are not contrary to law. All laws and royal commands relating to state affairs must be countersigned by the Prime Minister or a Minister. In case of an emergency when there is an urgent necessity to maintain national or public safety or national economic security or to avert public calamity, the King may issue an emergency decree which shall have the force of an Act. The emergency decree shall be submitted by the Council of Ministers to the National Assembly as soon as possible. If it is approved, it shall continue in force; if not, it shall lapse.

OTHER PROVISIONS

Judges are independent in the trial and adjudication of cases in accordance with the law. In the case where there is a dispute on the jurisdiction between the Court of Justice and any other Court, or between other Courts, the Constitutional Tribunal shall decide it.

Judicial System

SUPREME COURT

Sarn Dika: The final court of appeal in all civil, bankruptcy, labour, juvenile and criminal cases. The Court sits in plenary session occasionally to determine cases of exceptional importance, when the judges disagree or cases where there are reasons for reconsideration or overruling of its own precedents. Three judges (one-half the total number of Supreme Court judges) form a quorum.
President (Chief Justice): Prof. Banyut Suchiva.
Vice-Presidents: Prapasna Auychai, Pricha Sumawong, Phairochana Vaikasi.

COURT OF APPEALS

Sarn Uthorn: Appellate jurisdiction in all civil, bankruptcy, juvenile and criminal matters; appeals from all the Courts of First Instance throughout the country come to this Court. Two judges form a quorum.
Chief Justice: Sansern Kraichitti.
Deputy Chief Justices: Kusol Boonyuen, Watana Padungjit, Sema Ratanamalai.

COURTS OF FIRST INSTANCE

Central Juvenile Courts (Sarn Kadee Dek Lae Yaowachon): Original jurisdiction over juvenile delinquency and matters affecting children and young persons. Two judges and two associate judges (one of whom must be a woman) form a quorum. There are six courts in Bangkok, Songkla, Nakhon Ratchasima, Chiang Mai, Ubon Ratchathani and Rayong.
Chief Justice: Damrong Jamsutee.

Central Labour Court (Sarn Rang Ngan Klang): Court of jurisdiction in labour cases throughout the country.
Chief Justice: Amnak Khlaisang.

Civil Court (Sarn Pang): Court of general original jurisdiction in civil and bankruptcy cases in Bangkok. Two judges form a quorum.
Chief Justice: Chamras Kemacharu.

Criminal Court (Sarn Aya): Court of general original jurisdiction in criminal cases in Bangkok. Two judges form a quorum.
Chief Justice: Pinyo Thiraniti.

Magistrates' Courts (Sarn Kwaeng): Adjudicate in small cases with minimum formality and expense. Judges sit singly.

Provincial Courts (Sarn Changwat): Exercise unlimited original jurisdiction in all civil and criminal matters, including bankruptcy, within its own district which is generally the province itself. Two judges form a quorum. At each of the five Provincial Courts in the South of Thailand where the majority of the population are Muslims (i.e. Pattani, Yala, Betong, Satun and Narathiwat), there are two Dato Yutithum or Kadis (Muslim judges). A Kadi sits with two trial judges in order to administer Islamic laws and usages in civil cases involving family and inheritance where all parties concerned are Muslims. Questions on Islamic laws and usages which are interpreted by a Kadi are final.

Thon Buri Civil Court (Sarn Pang Thon Buri): The same jurisdiction as the Civil Court, but over nine districts of Bangkok Metropolis.

Thon Buri Criminal Court (Sarn Aya Thon Buri): The same jurisdiction as the Criminal Court, but over nine districts of Bangkok Metropolis.

Religion

Buddhism is the predominant religion, followed by more than 90% of Thailand's total population. About 4% of the population are Muslim, being ethnic Malays, mainly in the south. Most of the immigrant Chinese are Confucians. The Christians number 363,300, of whom about 75% are Roman Catholic, mainly in Bangkok and northern Thailand. Brahmins, Hindus and Sikhs number 25,200.

TOGO

Introductory Survey

Location, Climate, Language, Religion, Flag, Capital

The Togolese Republic lies in West Africa, forming a narrow strip stretching north from a coastline of about 50 km (30 miles) on the Gulf of Guinea. It is bordered by Ghana to the west, by Benin to the east, and by Burkina Faso to the north. The climate is hot and humid, with an average annual temperature of 27°C (81°F) on the coast, rising to 30°C (86°F) in the drier north. The official languages are French, Kabiye and Ewe. The majority of the population follow animist beliefs, while about 25% are Christians and 7.5% Muslims. The national flag (proportions 3 by 2) has five equal horizontal stripes, alternately green and yellow, with a square red canton, containing a five-pointed white star, in the upper hoist. The capital is Lomé.

Recent History

Togoland, of which modern Togo was formerly a part, became a German colony in 1894. Shortly after the outbreak of the First World War in 1914, the colony was occupied by French and British forces, who overthrew the German administration. After the war, Togoland was divided into zones of occupation, with France controlling the larger eastern section while the United Kingdom governed the west. French and British Togoland were each administered under a League of Nations mandate. The partition of Togoland split the homeland of the Ewe people, who inhabit the southern part of the territory, and this has been a continuing source of friction. After the Second World War, French and British Togoland became UN Trust Territories.

In May 1956 a UN-supervised plebiscite in British Togoland produced, despite Ewe opposition, majority support for a merger with the neighbouring territory of the Gold Coast, then a British colony, in an independent state. The region accordingly became part of Ghana (q.v.) in the following year. In October 1956, in another plebiscite, French Togoland voted to become an autonomous republic within the French Union. The new Togolese Republic had internal self-government until becoming fully independent on 27 April 1960. The granting of independence to Togo had previously been approved by a UN resolution in December 1959.

Prior to independence, Togo's leading political parties were Unité togolaise (UT), led by Sylvanus Olympio, and the Parti togolais du progrès (PTP), led by Nicolas Grunitzky, Olympio's brother-in-law. In 1956 Grunitzky became Prime Minister in the first autonomous government, but in April 1958 a UN-supervised election was won by UT. This brought to power Olympio, a campaigner for Ewe reunification, who became Prime Minister and led Togo to independence.

At elections in April 1961, Olympio became Togo's first President, elected (unopposed) for a seven-year term, while his UT party won all 51 seats in the National Assembly after opposition candidates were disallowed. At the same time, a referendum approved a new constitution. Grunitzky, meanwhile, had gone into exile. The UT regime, which had become increasingly authoritarian, was overthrown by a military revolt, in which President Olympio was killed, on 13 January 1963. At the request of the insurgents, Grunitzky returned from exile and became provisional President. A referendum in May 1963 approved another constitution, confirmed Grunitzky as President (for a five-year term) and elected a new National Assembly from a single list of candidates, giving equal representation to the four main political parties, including Grunitzky's Union démocratique des peuples togolaises, which had replaced the PTP, and the late President Olympio's UT. However, the new regime faced opposition from UT supporters, who staged an unsuccessful coup attempt in November 1966.

Following a rift with the armed forces, President Grunitzky was deposed by a bloodless military coup on 13 January 1967, the fourth anniversary of Olympio's death. The constitution was abrogated, and the National Assembly dissolved. The coup was led by Lt-Col (later Gen.) Etienne Gnassingbe Eyadéma, the Army Chief of Staff, who assumed the office of President in April 1967. Political parties were banned, and the President ruled by decree. President Eyadéma, a northerner, had taken a prominent part in the 1963 rising and was reputedly Olympio's assassin. In November 1969 a new ruling party, the Rassemblement du peuple togolais (RPT), was founded, with Gen. Eyadéma as its President. In August 1970 a plot to overthrow President Eyadéma was foiled, and several supporters of the late President Olympio were arrested. The leader of the attempted coup, Dr Noé Kutuklui (a former UT official), escaped abroad.

President Eyadéma's personality has been a focus of national unity and stability, while equal participation by the main ethnic groups in the RPT has largely defused long-standing regional rivalry. A referendum in January 1972 produced a massive vote of support for Eyadéma. The President repeatedly announced his intention to return Togo to civilian rule, despite continuing public support for the army. At the RPT congress in November 1976 it was decided that the party's Political Bureau should take precedence over the Government. A substantial government reshuffle in January 1977 left Gen. Eyadéma as the sole representative of the armed forces in the Council of Ministers.

In October 1977 the authorities foiled a further attempted coup plot, allegedly led by exiled supporters of ex-President Olympio. A period of political tension followed, and in August 1979 a court in Lomé sentenced 10 men to death, eight of them in absentia. The sentences were subsequently repealed by the President.

In Togo's first elections for 16 years, held on 30 December 1979, Gen. Eyadéma was confirmed in office as President, elected (unopposed) for a seven-year term. At the same time, a proposed new Constitution (the first for more than 12 years) was overwhelmingly endorsed, while the list of 67 candidates for a single-party National Assembly obtained 96% of the votes cast. On 13 January 1980, the 13th anniversary of his accession to power, the President proclaimed the 'Third Republic'. A major government reshuffle was carried out in September 1984, and several long-serving ministers were removed from office. In January 1985 President Eyadéma proclaimed his intention to introduce a measure of 'democratization', and announced that, at the legislative elections of March 1985, in each constituency the RPT would present a choice of candidates to the electorate. The 77 seats were contested by 216 candidates. The RPT remains the only legal political party, however.

The Togolese Government favours a broad association of African states on a basis of shared interests, to replace the present groupings, which, it feels, have been largely determined by a shared colonial past. In 1975 President Eyadéma played a leading part in the creation of the Economic Community of West African States (ECOWAS, see p. 134), an organization of both former British and former French colonies. In March 1980 Togo joined the Union of African Parliaments (UPA).

Political and economic relations with France were consolidated by the visit of President Mitterrand to Togo in January 1983, and in June President Eyadéma paid a 15-day visit to Europe, which included official meetings at the EEC. In October 1983 the President visited the USA to encourage US investment in Togo. Relations with neighbouring Ghana and Benin have frequently become strained, as both countries have periodically closed their borders with Togo in an effort to combat smuggling and to curb political activity by exiles. In December 1984 security agreements were reached between Togo, Ghana, Benin and Nigeria, which included an extradition treaty and measures to reduce smuggling.

Government

Under the Constitution approved in December 1979, executive power is vested in the President, who is elected for seven years by universal adult suffrage. The President appoints and leads a Council of Ministers. He can dissolve the National Assembly, comprising 77 members, directly elected for a five-year term. The Rassemblement du peuple togolais, the sole authorized political party in Togo, mobilizes support for the Government. The country is divided into four Regions, each administered by an appointed Inspector, who is assisted by an elected council.

Defence

In July 1984 Togo's armed forces numbered about 5,080, including two infantry regiments and a small naval force. There were 750 men in paramilitary forces. Under military agreements with France, Togo receives assistance with training and equipment. The 1982 defence budget was US $21m.

Economic Affairs

Agriculture is the leading sector of the economy, engaging about 70% of the working population but providing less than 40% of the country's gross domestic product (GDP), while only 11% of the land is cultivated. Agricultural development, referred to as the 'Green Revolution', is regarded as a top priority in President Eyadéma's policies. The principal food crops are yams, millet, cassava and maize. Livestock breeding and fishing also contribute to the economy. The major cash crops are coffee, cocoa, cotton, groundnuts and palm kernels. Agricultural production declined during the 1970s, and in 1977 severe drought in the north necessitated international famine relief programmes. Output of cash crops has fluctuated widely, but has generally recovered in recent years, as replanting schemes, implemented since 1975, have taken effect. A US $11m. project to replant 7,500 ha of coffee and 4,000 ha of cocoa in the western plateau region was launched in 1984, supported by World Bank and EEC funds. In 1982 it was announced that Togo had reached agricultural self-sufficiency, but serious drought in 1983 led to a shortfall in production of food and cash crops. Production was expected to recover in 1984/85, following improved rainfall. A 'Food for Work' programme is in operation, designed to increase agricultural production by providing food grains and flour to people in exchange for their labour. New industrial crops, such as soybeans, tobacco, sisal and sugar cane, are being introduced. Other rural projects include the expansion of tobacco production, improvement of stock-raising, reafforestation and the improvement of cereals storage.

Phosphates were discovered in Togo in 1952, and exports began in 1961. Togo's phosphate deposits, at Hahotoé and Kpogamé, are of exceptionally high quality, and the mineral is the country's leading export. Togo was the world's fourth largest phosphate producer in 1979. High prices for the commodity in 1974 brought Togo's balance of payments into surplus, and the Compagnie togolaise des mines du Bénin was nationalized. A sharp decline in world demand followed, however, and exports fell from a record 3m. tons in 1979 to 2.2m. tons in 1981 and to 1.9m. tons in 1982, resulting in the closure of two of Togo's five treatment plants. Revenue from phosphates amounted to 30,100m. francs CFA in 1981, accounting for 40% of export revenue. Phosphate exports rose to 2.8m. tons in 1984, owing to a recovery in the world phosphate market. Production of phosphoric acid and fertilizers from low-grade rock and slimes is being considered, while plant improvements, to extract phosphates previously lost to the sea, are expected to increase output. Reserves of magnesium, bauxite, iron ore and other minerals have been discovered, and in February 1984 a five-year plan to develop mineral resources was announced.

The manufacturing sector comprises mainly the processing of agricultural produce and the production of consumer goods. Togo embarked upon a large-scale public investment programme in the early 1970s, but the state-owned industrial sector has proved uneconomic, and in 1983 plans to denationalize loss-making industries were announced. A new investment code was drawn up, designed to attract more foreign investment into the country, and in 1984 the national steel works was leased to an American company as part of the Government's privatization plan. Several other state-owned companies and marketing boards were scheduled to be privatized in 1985. A large-scale cement plant at Tabligbo, jointly owned by the Governments of Togo, Ghana and the Ivory Coast, was opened in 1980 with a capacity to produce 1.2m. metric tons of clinker per year. The plant consistently failed to reach production targets, and in March 1984 it was forced to suspend operations because of high running costs and an electricity shortage. In November 1984 it was announced that the plant was to remain closed for a further two years. A petroleum refinery, using crude petroleum from Nigeria, began production in 1978, but by 1983 had not reached its full potential of 1m. tons per year. The commercial and agricultural sectors have proved more profitable, however, and factories for processing sugar, palm oil, powdered milk and cassava flour are under construction. A cotton mill at Lama-Kara, set up in 1981, is now fully operational, with a capacity of 24,000 tons of seed (unginned) cotton per year. Construction of the Nangbeto hydroelectric dam on the Mono river, a joint project with Benin, is scheduled for completion in 1988. The dam will have a generating capacity of a 60 MW, and is expected to supply the electricity needs of both countries, as well as to provide irrigation for 43,000 ha of land.

Low world prices and a declining demand for Togo's three main export commodities (phosphates, cocoa and coffee), as well as debts arising from ambitious capital investment schemes in the early 1970s, have led to economic problems in recent years. An IMF-sponsored stabilization plan, begun in 1979, imposed strict limits on foreign borrowing, and the 1981–85 development plan aimed to achieve an industrial growth rate of 12.8% per year and a current surplus on the balance of payments by 1985. A structural adjustment programme, supported by the IMF, was implemented in 1983. The Government introduced austerity measures, including a sharp reduction in public investment, a 'freeze' on civil service salaries and the imposition of a 'solidarity tax' on higher-paid workers. GDP, which had grown at an average rate of nearly 7% annually (in real terms) during 1976–79, declined by an average of 5% per year during 1980–83, mainly as a result of the drought and of the 18-month closure of the border with Ghana, normally an important trading partner. However, IMF estimates predicted a 3% growth in real GDP for 1984. Austerity measures were successful in bringing down the rate of inflation, which fell from 15% in 1983 to 10% in 1984. In June 1984 the 'Paris Club' of creditors agreed to reschedule Togo's foreign debt, estimated at US $1,000m., following IMF approval of a 12-month stand-by arrangement authorizing purchases of up to SDR 19m. Even with rescheduling, however, Togo's debt service repayments for 1984 were estimated to represent around one-third of national budget expenditure.

Transport and Communications

There are 525 km of railways, including three lines running inland from Lomé and a coastal line which joins with the Benin system. A rail link from the cement plant at Tabligbo to the port of Lomé (80 km) has been constructed with foreign aid. There are 7,850 km of roads, of which about 1,500 km are bituminized. In 1980 the north–south road was completed, which links Burkina Faso, Niger and Mali with the sea at Lomé. In 1983 plans were announced to construct sections of the Route Transversale to link central Togo with Ghana and Benin. Lomé is the major port, but phosphates are exported through a new port at Kpémé. Work on expanding the port of Lomé began in 1982, aiming to double the port's capacity by 1984, thus strengthening Togo's position as a commercial opening to West Africa. There are several airfields in Togo, and an international airport at Lomé. A telecommunications centre, set up in 1978, links Togo with other African countries, and with the USA and parts of Europe.

Social Welfare

Medical services are provided by the Government. In 1979 Togo had 139 physicians. In 1981 there were 61 hospital establishments, with a total of 4,500 beds.

Education

In 1970 adult illiteracy averaged 84.1% (males 73.1%; females 92.9%). The education budget for the period 1981–85 was 21,500m. francs CFA, reflecting Togo's literacy campaign. Education is, in theory, compulsory for children aged six to 12 years. In 1982 about 68% of children between the ages of six and 18 years attended school (73% of those between six and 12 years). Reforms that were announced in 1977 allocated funds for adult education and vocational training, ended entrance examinations for secondary schools and made proficiency in the two national languages, Ewe and Kabiye, compulsory. Mission schools are important and educate almost one-half of all pupils. There is a university at Lomé, and scholarships to French universities are available.

Tourism

Big game hunting, fishing and good beaches are the main attractions. The number of tourists visiting Togo increased from 51,000 in 1974 to 75,000 in 1978, and to 130,609 in 1982. There were 50 hotels, with a total of 4,000 beds, in 1982.

Public Holidays

1985: 1 May (Labour Day), 16 May (Ascension Day), 27 May (Whit Monday), 15 August (Assumption), 1 November (Memorial Day), 25 December (Christmas).

1986: 1 January (New Year's Day), 13 January (Liberation Day, anniversary of the 1967 coup), 24 January (Sarakawa), 31 March (Easter Monday), 24 April (Day of Victory), 27 April (Independence Day).

TONGA

Introductory Survey

Location, Climate, Language, Religion, Flag, Capital

The Kingdom of Tonga comprises 172 islands in the south-western Pacific Ocean, about 650 km (400 miles) east of Fiji. The Tonga (or Friendly) Islands are divided into three main groups: Vava'u, Ha'apai and Tongatapu. Only 36 of the islands are permanently inhabited. The climate is mild (16°–21°C) for most of the year, though usually hotter (27°C) in December and January. The languages are Tongan, a Polynesian language, and English. Tongans are predominantly Christians of the Wesleyan faith, although there are some Roman Catholics and Anglicans. The national flag (proportions 2 by 1) is red, with a rectangular white canton, containing a red cross, in the upper hoist. The capital is Nuku'alofa, on Tongatapu Island.

Recent History

The foundations of the constitutional monarchy were laid in the 19th century. The kingdom was neutral until 1900, when it became a British Protected State. The treaty establishing the Protectorate was revised in 1958 and 1967, giving Tonga increasing control over its affairs. Queen Salote Tupou III came to the throne in 1918 and ruled Tonga until her death in December 1965. She was succeeded by her son, Prince Tupouto'a Tungi, who had been Prime Minister since 1949. He took the title of King Taufa'ahau Tupou IV and appointed his brother, Prince Fatafehi Tu'ipelehake, to be Prime Minister. Tonga achieved full independence, within the Commonwealth, on 4 June 1970.

Elections held in May 1981 brought a surprise loss for the People's Representatives group, the new Assembly being dominated by traditionalist conservatives. In March 1982 emergency aid had to be sent to Tonga after Cyclone Isaac had caused extensive damage in all three island groups. In the same month, the Finance Minister, Mahe Tupouniua, resigned at the King's request after refusing to grant him travel funds above what had been allocated in the budget. Further elections to the Legislative Assembly took place in May 1984.

Government

Tonga is an hereditary monarchy. The King is Head of State and Head of Government. He appoints, and presides over, a Privy Council which acts as the national Cabinet. Apart from the King, the Council includes eight Ministers, appointed for life and led by the Prime Minister, and the Governors of Ha'apai and Vava'u. The unicameral Legislative Assembly comprises 29 members: the King, the Privy Council, nine hereditary nobles (elected by their peers) and nine representatives elected by all adult Tongan citizens. Elected members hold office for three years. There are no political parties.

Defence

Tonga has its own defence force, consisting of both regular and reserve units.

Economic Affairs

The majority of the islands have an inherently fertile soil, and the economy is based mainly on agriculture. The two principal crops, coconuts and bananas, normally account for the bulk of Tonga's exports, although in January 1985 cyclones destroyed nearly 70% of the country's banana crop. Vanilla was introduced as a new cash crop, and by 1979 it had become the third most important export. In 1984 work began on a project to create a commercial passion-fruit plantation on Tongatapu, in association with a juice-extraction factory. The manufacturing sector of the economy, although small, is growing steadily and diversely, while the fishing industry was strengthened in 1984 by the opening of a dockyard complex in the Ha'apai group and the progress in constructing a port at Nuku'alofa, together with a fleet of up to 60 fishing-boats, scheduled for completion in mid-1985. Tourism is an increasingly important source of revenue, bringing $ T6.2m. to Tonga in 1983. In June 1984 it was reported that test drilling for petroleum would resume off Tongatapu by the end of that year, in spite of the failure of previous searches.

Tonga's third Five-Year Plan (1976–80) aimed at directing investment to the productive sector of the economy and at expanding the existing infrastructure. Tonga receives aid from the United Kingdom, New Zealand, Australia and the Asian Development Bank. Unemployment (estimated to affect 20% of the work-force in 1984) and inflation (running at 13.4% per year in December 1983) are major problems which have led to massive temporary migration: between 1974 and 1977 about 10,000 Tongans obtained entry visas to New Zealand.

Transport and Communications

There are 262 km of metalled roads on the two largest islands, Tongatapu and Vava'u, and about 20 km on both Ha'apai and 'Eua. All other roads are unsurfaced earth or coral and therefore suitable for motor traffic only in dry weather. The two main ports of entry are at Nuku'alofa (Tongatapu) and Neiafu (Vava'u), with two smaller ports at Pangai and Niuatoputapu; internal services are mainly provided by government-owned vessels. International flights operate through Fua'amotu airport, near the capital, and there are other limited landing facilities for light aircraft on internal services.

Social Welfare

The Government operates four public hospitals and a number of dispensaries. At the end of 1983 there were 48 physicians working in Tonga.

Education

Free state education is compulsory for children between six and 14 years of age, while the Government and other Commonwealth countries offer scholarship schemes enabling students to go abroad for higher education. In 1983 there were 158 primary and secondary schools (with 32,597 pupils), 11 technical and vocational schools and one teacher training college. Some degree courses are offered at the university division of 'Atenisi Institute. Estimated government expenditure on education in 1984/85 was $ T3,003,046.

Tourism

Tourism is expanding, with government encouragement, and there were 92,494 visitors to the islands in 1983.

Public Holidays

1985: 4 May (HRH the Crown Prince's Birthday), 4 June (Independence Day), 4 July (HM the King's Birthday), 4 November (Constitution Day), 4 December (Tupou I Day), 25, 26 December (Christmas).

1986: 1 January (New Year's Day), 28–31 March (Easter), 25 April (ANZAC Day).

Weights and Measures

In 1980 Tonga adopted the metric system of weights and measures in place of the imperial system.

Currency and Exchange Rates

100 seniti = 1 pa'anga (Tongan dollar or $ T).

Exchange rates (31 December 1984):
£1 sterling = 1.403 pa'anga;
US $1 = 1.2115 pa'anga.

Statistical Survey

Technical and vocational (1983): 4 government and 7 church colleges, 409 pupils.

Teacher training (1983): 1 college, 145 students.

In 1983 193 students were studying overseas.

Directory

The Constitution

The Constitution of Tonga is based on that granted in 1875 by King George Tupou I. It provides for a government consisting of the Sovereign; a Privy Council, which is appointed by the Sovereign and consists of the Sovereign and the Cabinet; the Cabinet, which consists of a Prime Minister, a Deputy Prime Minister, other Ministers and the Governors of Ha'apai and Vava'u; a Legislative Assembly and a Judiciary. Limited law-making power is vested in the Privy Council and any legislation passed by the Executive is subject to review by the Legislative Assembly.

The Government

The Sovereign: HM King Taufa'ahau Tupou IV (succeeded to the throne 15 December 1965).

CABINET

Prime Minister, Minister of Agriculture, Forestry and Fisheries, Marine Affairs, and Telegraphs and Telephones: HRH Prince Fatafehi Tu'ipelehake.

Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Lands, Survey and Natural Resources: Baron Tuita.

Minister of Foreign Affairs and Defence: HRH Crown Prince Tupouto'a.

Minister of Finance: Cecil Cocker.

Minister of Police: 'Akau'ola.

Minister of Education, Works and Civil Aviation: Dr S. Langi Kavaliku.

Minister of Industries, Commerce, Labour and Tourism: Baron Vaea.

Minister of Health: Dr Sione Tapa.

Governor of Ha'apai: Fakafanua.

Governor of Vava'u: Dr Ma'afu Tupou.

Judicial System

There are eight Magistrates' Courts and a Land Court, and a Supreme Court from which appeals lie to the Privy Council.

Appeals from the Magistrates' Courts are heard by the Supreme Court. In cases which come before the Supreme Court the accused, or either party in a civil suit, may elect for a jury trial. The Chief Justice is resident in Tonga and appeals from the Supreme Court are heard by the Privy Council as a Court of Appeal. The Puisne Judge is Judge of the Supreme Court and of the Land Court in which he sits with a Tongan assessor.

Supreme Court: Justice Department, POB 11, Nuku'alofa; tel. 21598.

Chief Justice and Puisne Judge: Giles Francis Harwood.

Religion

The Tongans are almost all Christians, and about 77% of the population belong to sects of the Wesleyan faith. There is also a small number of Roman Catholics, Anglicans and Latter-day Saints (Mormons). Fourteen denominations are represented in total.

CHRISTIANITY

The Anglican Communion

TRINIDAD AND TOBAGO

Introductory Survey

Location, Climate, Language, Religion, Flag, Capital

The Republic of Trinidad and Tobago consists of Trinidad, the southernmost of the Caribbean islands, and Tobago, which is 32 km (20 miles) to the north-east. Trinidad, which accounts for 94% of the total area, lies just off the north coast of Venezuela, on the South American mainland, while the country's nearest neighbour to the north is Grenada. The climate is tropical, with a dry season from January to May. Rainfall averages 1,630 mm (64 inches) per year. The annual average daytime temperature is 29°C (84°F). The official and main language is English, but French, Spanish, Hindi and Chinese are also spoken. In 1980 about 60% of the population were Christians, mainly Roman Catholics (34%) and Anglicans (15%), while 25% were Hindus and 6% Muslims. The national flag (proportions 5 by 3) is deep red, divided by a white-edged black diagonal stripe from upper hoist to lower fly. The capital is Port of Spain, on the island of Trinidad.

Recent History

Trinidad was first colonized by the Spanish in 1532 but, was ceded to the British in 1802. Africans were transported to the island to work as slaves, but slavery was abolished in 1834. Shortage of labour led to the arrival of large numbers of Indian and Chinese immigrants, as indentured labourers, during the second half of the 19th century. In 1888 the island of Tobago, which had finally been ceded to the British in 1814, was joined with Trinidad as one political and administrative unit, and the territory remained a British colony until its independence on 31 August 1962.

The beginnings of modern politics emerged in the 1930s with the formation of a trade union movement. The first political party, the People's National Movement (PNM), was founded in 1956 by Dr Eric Williams. It campaigned successfully at the elections to the Legislative Council in September 1956, and Dr Williams became the colony's first Chief Minister in October. In 1958 the territory became a member of the newly-established Federation of the West Indies, and in the following year achieved full internal self-government. With the secession of Jamaica from the Federation in 1961, Trinidad and Tobago withdrew and the Federation collapsed. After independence, Dr Williams was restyled Prime Minister, and in 1967 Trinidad and Tobago became the first Commonwealth member of the Organization of American States (see p. 191).

'Black Power' riots in April 1970 and a mutiny in the army, which lasted for six months, resulted in the declaration of a state of emergency; subsequent unrest culminated in guerrilla warfare. Elections to the House of Representatives were held in May 1971, resulting in a complete victory for the PNM.

A new constitution came into effect on 1 August 1976, making Trinidad and Tobago a republic, within the Commonwealth, and reducing the minimum voting age to 18 years. The first parliamentary elections of the republic were held in September, when the PNM won 24 of the 36 seats in the House of Representatives. The United Labour Front (ULF), a newly-formed party led by trade unionists, won 10 seats, while the Democratic Action Congress (DAC) won the two Tobago seats. The former Governor-General, Ellis Clarke, was sworn in as the country's first President in December 1976. A parliamentary resolution in 1977 to grant Tobago self-rule resulted, after long resistance from the Government, in the formation in 1980 of a Tobago House of Assembly, giving the island limited autonomy.

Dr Williams, who had been Prime Minister since independence, died in March 1981, having consistently refused to nominate a successor. The President selected George Chambers, a deputy leader of the PNM and Minister of Agriculture, to assume the leadership ad interim. At a special convention of the PNM in May, Chambers was formally adopted as party leader and confirmed as Prime Minister. Despite speculation about the country's political future following Williams' death, the PNM increased its majority in the House of Representatives by two seats in a general election in November. The ULF, the DAC and the Tapia House Movement, campaigning jointly as the Trinidad and Tobago National Alliance, succeeded in retaining only 10 seats. The newly-formed Organization for National Reconstruction (ONR), led by former PNM Minister Karl Hudson-Phillips, emerged as the only serious threat to the PNM, gaining 22.3% of the total vote but no seats.

In 1982 the National Alliance forged stronger internal links, with the intention of forming a credible left-wing opposition in preparation for the next general election, due in 1986. Karl Hudson-Phillips stated in December 1982 that the ONR would not join the Alliance, although it would co-operate closely with the other three parties. At local elections in August 1983, however, all four parties combined to oppose the PNM. This new coalition, called the 'Accommodation', won 66 of the 120 council seats being contested. The PNM took the remaining 54, thus suffering its first electoral defeat since 1956. In August 1984 the National Alliance and the ONR moved closer together by establishing a common front, to be known as the National Alliance for Reconstruction (NAR). The elections to the Tobago House of Assembly in November 1984 were seen as the first challenge by the new grouping. In the elections the DAC won a convincing victory, reducing the PNM's representation from four seats to one. Although the Government's popular support has been undermined by its stringent economic policies since 1983, the continuing divergence of ideology among the members of the NAR, and the unresolved leadership of the organization, has weakened its potential electoral threat on the island of Trinidad itself.

The need for what Chambers called 'adjustments', because of the country's economic situation, provoked labour unrest over wage restraint, notably in a bitter strike at Trinidad's petroleum refineries during May 1984. Trinidad and Tobago's import controls also strained relations with other members of CARICOM, especially Barbados. This was aggravated in October 1983 by Prime Minister Chambers' decision not to support, or participate in, the US-led intervention in Grenada, leading to the mutual withdrawal of High Commissioners between Trinidad and Tobago and Barbados. During 1984 the rifts gradually healed, although suspicions remained between Trinidad and its Caribbean neighbours.

Government

Legislative power is vested in the bicameral Parliament, consisting of the Senate, with 31 members, and the House of Representatives, with 36 members. Representatives are elected for a five-year term by universal adult suffrage. The President is a constitutional Head of State, chosen by an electoral college of members of both the Senate and the House of Representatives. Members of the Senate are nominated by the President in consultation with, and on the advice of, the Prime Minister and the Leader of the Opposition. The Cabinet has effective control of the Government and is responsible to Parliament. Tobago Island was granted its own House of Assembly in 1980. This has 15 members, of whom 12 are elected. The remaining three are selected by the majority party.

Defence

In July 1984 the defence forces consisted of an army of 1,200 men, a navy of 250 and an air force of 50.

Economic Affairs

The traditional sugar-based economy declined towards the end of the 19th century, and sugar was gradually replaced by the petroleum industry. Trinidad's first oil well was bored in 1902, and by the 1940s petroleum had become the mainstay of the economy. The industry was further boosted by the discovery of offshore fields in 1955. By the 1970s petroleum accounted for about 50% of the country's gross domestic product (GDP), about 90% of export income and a major part of government revenue. No significant onshore discoveries have been made since the early 1970s, and offshore fields accounted for about 80% of production in 1983. After reaching a peak in 1978 of 230,000 barrels per day (b/d), average output of crude petroleum slowed to 189,355 b/d in 1981 and to 138,349 b/d in 1983, the lowest figure since 1972. Even at these low rates of extraction, it is estimated that petroleum deposits will be near exhaustion during the 1990s. Cuts in taxes on production companies helped to stimulate a small increase in output during 1984: average production to September was 165,563 b/d. There are two petroleum refineries, mostly producing fuel oil for export. In August 1984 the Government bought the Pointe-à-Pierre refinery from Texaco for US $175m., to prevent its closure. The country now has refining capacity far in excess of its own needs.

The price fluctuations on the world petroleum market also pose a serious threat to the stability of the Trinidad economy: as the leading Caribbean producer, Trinidad benefited from the worldwide increase in prices in 1979, when the Government was able to use the substantial revenues from petroleum to offset inflation and to create much-needed jobs in the industry. However, the depressed state of the world market in 1982 and 1983 reversed this trend, and the Government was seeking alternative sources of revenue.

Reserves of natural gas are being developed to compensate for lost revenue from the petroleum industry. The country's proven reserves amount to 396,000m. cu m, with potential reserves estimated at 800,000m. cu m. A 120-km pipeline, linking the offshore fields and the Point Lisas industrial estate, was under construction in 1984. About 5,800m. cu m of natural gas was utilized in 1982. Ambitious plans for a liquefied natural gas plant at Point Lisas have been temporarily abandoned.

The Government's concern to widen the country's economic base and to reduce the overwhelming dependence on petroleum has led to heavy investment in a number of planned industries. The first of these, the TRINGEN ammonia plant, came into production in 1977. The success of this operation has prompted the Government to consider the construction of more ammonia plants, to make the country a major world producer. Urea and methanol plants commenced operations in mid-1984, and large contracts have been placed for the export of urea to India and the People's Republic of China. Other projects include petrochemicals, fertilizers, furfural, plastics and electronics. However, the state-owned iron and steel company, ISCOTT (whose steel mill at Point Lisas went into operation in mid-1981), produced a deficit of TT $220m. in the 11 months to June 1983, and by 1984 the Government was looking for a potential foreign investor to prevent the temporary closure of the plant. An export zone and a technological component processing zone have been promised as an incentive for manufacturers to concentrate on producing goods for export, to offset declining petroleum exports.

Apart from petroleum and gas, Trinidad has the world's largest supply of natural asphalt. Production was 29,700 metric tons in 1982 but world markets are depressed for this commodity also.

Tourism is the third largest source of foreign exchange, after petroleum and interest earnings on investments, with about 200,000 visitors arriving annually. However, the majority of these are private or business visitors, and only about 20% stay in hotels. The cruise-ship business, which brought 65,000 tourists to the islands in 1978, yielded only 6,000 in 1980. In 1983 investment in tourism centred on the need to improve airport facilities and to increase the number of hotel rooms.

The agricultural sector is small, employing only about 10% of the labour force in 1980 and contributing only 2.8% of GDP in 1978. Associated industries include the manufacture of sugar, rum, molasses, fruit juices and cotton textiles. The sugar industry is in serious decline; heavy rains in 1982 reduced the year's output of raw sugar to just over 80,000 tons, and in 1984 annual output declined further, to 71,000 tons. In 1985 the Government announced a major restructuring of the sugar industry, with the aim of making it self-sufficient and geared to producing sugar for the domestic market rather than for export. Levels of production in cocoa, coffee and citrus fruit cultivation have all fallen. Whereas in the 1960s the country was a net exporter of food, in 1982 food imports accounted for about 75% of total requirements. Trinidad has established its own Caribbean Aid Council, and in 1979 its regional aid contribution amounted to 2.2% of GDP.

After the OPEC-led oil price rises in 1973, revenue from petroleum rose from TT $888m. in 1974 to TT $4,253m. in 1981. Government current spending consequently rose from TT $670m. to TT $3,564m. over the same period, with capital spending growing even faster, at more than 40% per year. The standard of living increased dramatically, and the country's GDP per head reached US $7,000 in 1982, a much higher level than in any other Latin American or Caribbean country. Unemployment fell from over 15% in 1975 to under 10% in 1982, and the import of foreign goods, mainly luxuries, rose from TT $791m. in 1972 to TT $8,442m. in 1982. In 1982 the cut in oil prices and the fall in petroleum production, combined with the world recession, halted this impressive growth: oil revenue fell by 17% to TT $3,531m. and the current balance of payments was transformed from a surplus of TT $1,341m. in 1981 to a deficit of TT $525m. in 1982. By September 1983 foreign exchange reserves had fallen by 18% since January, to TT $5,504m.

In 1983 the Government began the introduction of austerity measures, designed to help the economy to overcome these symptoms of economic recession. Controls were placed on imported goods, subsidies on food were withdrawn, and the Government hoped to keep public sector wage increases below the rate of inflation. A fall of 26% in petroleum revenues in 1983, to TT $2,400m., was the primary factor in the decline in GDP of 2.7%, in real terms, during the year. Owing to continued high costs, local manufacturing production also fell, and revenue from non-oil exports failed to offset the decline in petroleum revenues. The restriction of imports, however, was successful in causing a faster fall in imports, and there was a trade surplus of TT $133.4m. in the first six months of 1984. Foreign reserves stood at TT $4,492m. in April 1984, and government capital expenditure was cut back to prevent the further use of reserves to finance the budget deficit. New taxes, totalling TT $1,367m., were introduced in the 1983 and 1984 budgets, to help to finance continued levels of recurrent expenditure. It was hoped that this policy would stabilize reserves of foreign exchange, which declined from US $3,196.7m. at the end of 1981 to US $1,131.3m. at the end of 1984. In the 1985 budget further indirect taxes were introduced, cuts in government expenditure were proposed, and transfusions were undertaken from the long-term development fund to finance total government expenditure of TT $10,600m. Inflation averaged 16.7% during 1983, but had fallen to 13.0% in the 12 months to October 1984. The effects of the Government's austerity measures have increased unemployment on the islands, especially among the labour force in the sugar, petroleum-refining and iron and steel industries. Unemployment rose from 11.1% of the labour force in July 1983 to about 13% a year later, and was expected to rise still further.

Transport and Communications

Road transport is widely used for passengers and freight, and there are many buses and lorries. In 1977 there were 7,080 km (4,400 miles) of roads, of which 3,060 km (1,900 miles) were classified as major roads and 4,020 km (2,500 miles) as local roads. A major road-building programme is under way. Port of Spain and Scarborough, Tobago, each have a deep-water wharf, and there are regular sailings to all parts of the world from Port of Spain. A special container berth, with two large overhead cranes, has been built at Port of Spain. Improvement in the car-ferry service linking Trinidad and Tobago is under consideration. Numerous airlines use Piarco international airport, and there is an air shuttle service between Trinidad and Tobago.

Social Welfare

Old-age pensions are paid, and there is some unemployment relief. In 1982 there were 25 hospitals and nursing homes, with a total of 4,321 beds. In 1980 the country had 786 physicians. State medical services are free. In April 1972 the National Insurance System was inaugurated. The system is run by an independent board and its provisions are similar to those contained in the British system. Other social services include the provision of food stamps for the needy.

Education

Primary and secondary education is free. Attendance at school is officially compulsory for children between six and 12 years of age. Entrance to secondary schools is determined by the Common Entrance Examination. The junior secondary school system, for children aged 12 to 14, was introduced in 1972. Many schools are run jointly by the state and religious bodies. Primary education begins at the age of five and lasts seven years. In 1979 an estimated 77% of children in this age-group were enrolled at primary schools. Total enrolment at primary and secondary schools was equivalent to 78% of children aged five to 16. The Trinidad campus of the University of the West Indies, at St Augustine, includes an engineering faculty. Other institutions of higher education are the Polytechnic Institute and the East Caribbean Farm Institute. There are three teacher training colleges and three government technical institutes and vocational centres. In 1970 adult illiteracy averaged 7.8% (males 5.3%; females 10.3%).

Tourism

The climate and coastline of both Trinidad and Tobago attract visitors mainly from the USA, Canada and the CARICOM territories. The annual carnival festival is a major attraction. There were 186,800 foreign visitors in 1981.

Public Holidays

1985: 27 May (Whit Monday), 6 June (Corpus Christi), 19 June (Labour Day), 20 June* (Eid ul Fitr), 1 August (Caribbean Day), 6 August (Discovery Day), 27 August* (Eid ul Adha), 31 August (Independence Day), 24 September (Republic Day), 2 November (All Souls' Day), 26 November* (Yaum um Nabi), 25, 26 December (Christmas).

1986: 1 January (New Year's Day), 10, 11 February (Carnival), 28–31 March (Easter).

The Hindu festival of Divali (in October*) is also a public holiday.

Directory

The Constitution

Trinidad and Tobago became a republic, within the Commonwealth, under a new Constitution on 1 August 1976. The Constitution provides for a President and a bicameral Parliament comprising a Senate and a House of Representatives. The President is elected by an Electoral College of members of both the Senate and the House of Representatives. The Senate consists of 31 members appointed by the President: 16 on the advice of the Prime Minister, six on the advice of the Leader of the Opposition and nine at his own discretion from outstanding persons from economic, social or community organizations. The House of Representatives consists of 36 members who are elected by universal adult suffrage. The duration of a Parliament is five years. The Cabinet, presided over by the Prime Minister, is responsible for the general direction and control of the Government. It is collectively responsible to Parliament.

TUNISIA

Introductory Survey

Location, Climate, Language, Religion, Flag, Capital

The Republic of Tunisia lies in North Africa, bordered by Algeria to the west and by Libya to the south-east. To the north and east, Tunisia has a coastline on the Mediterranean Sea. The climate is temperate on the coast, with winter rain, but hot and dry inland. Temperatures in Tunis are generally between 6°C (43°F) and 33°C (91°F). The country's highest recorded temperature is 55°C (131°F). Average annual rainfall is up to 1,500 mm (60 in) in the north, but less than 200 mm (8 in) in the southern desert. The official language is Arabic, which is almost universally understood, and there is a small Berber-speaking minority. French is widely used as a second language. Islam is the state religion, and almost all of the inhabitants are Muslims. There are small minorities of Christians and Jews. The national flag (proportions 3 by 2) is red, with a white disc, containing a red crescent moon and a five-pointed red star, in the centre. The capital is Tunis.

Recent History

Tunisia was formerly a monarchy, with the Bey of Tunis as head of state. It became a French protectorate in 1883. A campaign for independence was led by the Néo-Destour (New Constitution) Party, founded in 1934 by Habib Bourguiba and renamed the Parti Socialiste Destourien (PSD) in 1964. France granted internal self-government in September 1955 and full independence on 20 March 1956. Five days later, elections were held for a Constitutional Assembly, which met in April and appointed Bourguiba to be Prime Minister. In July 1957 the Assembly deposed the Bey, abolished the monarchy and established a republic, with Bourguiba as President. A new constitution was promulgated in June 1959, and the first National Assembly was elected in November. In 1961 Tunisian troops blockaded the French naval base at Bizerta, and heavy fighting broke out. France agreed to evacuate the base in 1963. Although a one-party system was not institutionalized, the PSD was the only legal party between 1963 and 1981. All foreign-owned lands were appropriated in May 1964 but the drive to collectivize agriculture had to be abandoned because of resistance from the rural population.

The President's hold on power was confirmed by a PSD congress and national elections in 1974. The constitution was altered to allow Bourguiba to become President-for-Life and to confirm the Prime Minister, then Hedi Nouira, as his successor. President Bourguiba reacted harshly to student unrest and to workers' strikes, both of which have been common since 1974. A further source of discontent was the Government's refusal to allow the formation of political parties other than the PSD. A political confrontation developed between the Union Générale des Travailleurs Tunisiens (UGTT), led by Habib Achour, and the Government, which culminated in January 1978 with a 24-hour general strike, called by Achour in protest against the Government's labour policy and recent attacks on trade union offices. A state of emergency was declared, and at least 50 people were killed in clashes between rioters and troops. About 200 union leaders, including Achour, were arrested. The trials of leading trade unionists, which took place in August and September, were widely condemned by outside observers but resulted in prison sentences for Achour and the other main defendants. Achour was pardoned by the President in 1979 but remained under house arrest until December 1981, when he was allowed to resume his position as Secretary-General of the UGTT.

At the PSD Congress in September 1979, Nouira rejected opposition demands for a multi-party system, but emphasized the need for 'opening up' the PSD to accommodate different points of view. In April 1980 Nouira was succeeded by Mohamed Mzali, hitherto the Minister of Education, as Prime Minister and (ex officio) as Bourguiba's successor. Subsequently, a more moderate policy became apparent with the release of trade unionists who had been imprisoned in 1978 and with the appointment of liberals to the Government.

The one-party system was ended in July 1981, when the Parti Communiste Tunisien (PCT) was officially recognized. President Bourguiba announced that any political group which gained 5% of votes cast in the legislative elections in November would also be recognized as a party. The PCT, the Mouvement de l'Unité Populaire and the Mouvement des Démocrates Socialistes all protested against these conditions, and subsequently suffered an overwhelming defeat by the Front National, a joint front presented by the PSD and UGTT, which gained 94.6% of votes cast in elections to the National Assembly. The three other groups complained of 'electoral irregularities'. The Government also faced illegal opposition from the fundamentalist Islamic Tendency Movement (MIT).

In January 1984 widespread rioting broke out in Tunisia, provoked by a rise of 115% in the price of bread and the abolition of government subsidies on flour and other staple foods. Rioting started in the south of the country and spread to the northern cities of Sfax and Tunis. The Government declared a state of emergency, and called in troops to control street demonstrations. The resulting clashes between troops and demonstrators left an estimated 100 people dead and 500 injured. After a week of disturbances, President Bourguiba personally cancelled the price rises, and peace was re-established. An official inquiry into the cause of the riots accused the Minister of the Interior, Driss Guiga, of exploiting the violence for his own political ends and of failing to inform the President of the magnitude of the disturbances. Guiga had been dismissed by President Bourguiba in January, and subsequently left the country. The vacant portfolio was granted to Prime Minister Mzali, whose position was considerably strengthened by the downfall of his former rival for the presidential succession. In June Guiga was tried for high treason and sentenced to 15 years' imprisonment in absentia.

Tunisian foreign policy is noted for its moderation and for good relations with the USA. Relations with Libya have been marred in recent years by the dispute concerning demarcation of the continental shelf in the Gulf of Gabès (finally settled in February 1982) and by a guerrilla attack in January 1980 on the Tunisian town of Gafsa, for which the Tunisian Government held Libya responsible. Many of the estimated 6,000 PLO fighters who had agreed in August 1982 to leave Lebanon were evacuated to Tunisia, while the PLO temporarily transferred its headquarters to Tunis. During 1983 relations between the Maghreb countries improved considerably. A meeting between President Bourguiba and President Chadli of Algeria in March led to the drawing up of the Maghreb Fraternity and Co-operation Treaty, which defined the frontier between the two countries, thus ending a 20-year dispute. It was hoped that the treaty would eventually form the basis of a Greater Maghreb Union. It was therefore left open for other countries to sign, which Mauritania did in December 1983.

Government

Under the 1959 Constitution, legislative power is held by the unicameral National Assembly, with 136 members who are elected by universal adult suffrage for five years. Between 1963 and 1981 Tunisia was a one-party state, although an amendment to the electoral code in 1979 allowed more than one candidate for each seat. Since 1981 several political parties have been officially recognized. Executive power is held by the President, elected for five years by popular vote at the same time as the Assembly. In March 1975 the Assembly proclaimed Habib Bourguiba President-for-Life. The President, who is Head of State and Head of Government, appoints a Council of Ministers, headed by a Prime Minister, which is responsible to him. For local administration the country is divided into 18 governorates.

Defence

In July 1984 total armed forces numbered 35,100, consisting of an army of 30,000, navy of 2,600 and an air force of 2,500. There is a paramilitary force of 5,000. Officer-training is carried out in the USA and France as well as in Tunisia. Estimated defence expenditure for 1984 was 339.6m. dinars.

Economic Affairs

Agriculture and mining are the bases of the economy. The chief agricultural products are wheat, barley, olive oil, wine, citrus fruit, vegetables and dates. Large quantities of dairy produce, cereals, meat and sugar still have to be imported. In 1983 Tunisia imported 40% of its total food requirements. Market gardening and livestock breeding are being encouraged, as well as the development of irrigation. Between 1965 and 1969 a system of co-operative farming was promoted, but its failure has left agriculture divided into a large-scale modernized sector, under both state and private control, and a traditional sector of small peasant holdings. Rural depopulation is a serious problem: in 1960 an estimated 56% of the working population were engaged in agriculture, but by 1983 the proportion had fallen to 30%. A fishing programme, involving investment of 10.4m. dinars, was announced in 1981.

Phosphates and petroleum are the principal minerals and together provide around 23% of export revenue. It was planned to increase annual phosphate production to 6.8m. metric tons by 1986, and to develop 'down-stream' industries. Production of phosphate rock totalled 4.7m. tons in 1982 and 5.8m. tons in 1983. Oil production declined slightly in 1981 to 5.4m. metric tons petroleum equivalent; in 1982 the Tazarka offshore field began production. In 1983 petroleum production was 5.46m. tons. This figure was expected to rise considerably by 1985, as several small fields came into production, but it is anticipated that Tunisia will have to import some of its domestic energy requirement by the early 1990s. Iron, zinc and lead are also mined, but iron reserves are dwindling. There are large offshore reserves of natural gas.

Manufacturing is based on the processing of the country's agriculture and mineral products. A law of April 1972 made the whole country a virtual Free Zone for foreign export-oriented industries. Major installations include a steel works, a petroleum refinery, phosphate processing plants and cement works. Work started in 1984 on the construction of a terminal for the storage of petroleum products at La Skhirra, while the contract for a 105m. dinar phosphoric acid plant, also to be situated at La Skhirra, was won by a French company. The important textile industry was seriously affected by EEC import restrictions, imposed in 1977, but was to be modernized under the 1982–86 Plan.

The dramatic rise in world prices of phosphates and petroleum in 1973/74 largely contributed to a doubling in value of Tunisia's exports in 1974. Exports fell in 1975, however, partly as a result of a decline in world demand for phosphates, and imports continued to increase in value. The trade deficit has continued to grow, reaching 783m. dinars in 1983, but is partly offset by revenue from tourism and by remittances which are sent home by Tunisian workers abroad. GDP grew by 4.8% in 1983, and by an estimated 5.5% in 1984. Tunisia's external debt has risen rapidly, from 2,020m. dinars in 1982 to 2,515m. dinars in 1983, and to an estimated 3,060m. dinars in 1984. The average annual rate of inflation rose from 8.9% in 1981 to 13.7% in 1982, but fell to 9.0% in 1983.

Tunisia has a serious unemployment problem, aggravated by a high rate of population increase, and a permanent deficit on the current balance of payments. In 1984 it was estimated that 25%–30% of the labour force were either unemployed or underemployed. The Sixth Development Plan (1982–86) envisaged total investment of 8,200m. dinars, of which one-third was to be provided by foreign sources: Arab investment is being particularly encouraged, and several joint investment banks have been established. The Plan aimed at self-sufficiency in food production and emphasized job creation. It envisaged an average annual increase of 6.3% in real GDP.

Tunisia receives aid from Western countries, international institutions and on international financial markets. The country became a partial associate of the EEC in 1969; a revised association agreement was signed in 1976. More than one-half of Tunisia's exports are sold to the EEC countries but, with the accession of Greece, Portugal and Spain (some of Tunisia's principal agricultural competitors), Tunisia's share of the EEC market is expected to decline. Exports of olive oil, which are worth around US$70m. per year, are particularly threatened. In February 1983 Tunisia negotiated a $125m. Euroloan to offset the current deficit on its balance of payments, but by late 1983 a second loan became necessary, and a further $120m. loan was agreed in November.

Transport and Communications

In 1982 the total length of railways was 2,152 km, of which 479 km was narrow-gauge. Construction of a metropolitan railway system was begun in Tunis in 1980. The 10,800 km of main roads connect all the major commercial centres. There are four major ports and a special petroleum port at La Skhirra. A large new port at Gabès is being built. Air transport is provided by Tunis Air and several foreign lines; there are five international airports.

Social Welfare

A state system of social security provides benefits for sickness, maternity and old age. In 1981 Tunisia had 1,800 physicians and there were 112 government hospitals (with 13,938 beds) and 948 clinics and health centres. Free health services are available to 70% of the population. Regional committees for social security care for the aged, needy and orphaned.

Education

Primary education begins at six years of age and normally lasts for six years. Secondary education begins at the age of 12 and lasts for seven years. In 1982 the total enrolment at primary and secondary schools, which are mostly state-run, was equivalent to 70% of the school-age population (79% of boys; 60% of girls). An estimated 89% of children in the primary age-group (97% of boys; 81% of girls) were enrolled at primary schools. Arabic is the first language of instruction in primary and secondary schools, but French is also used. Adult illiteracy declined from 62.0% (males 48.9%; females 75.2%) in 1975 to 53.5% (males 38.9%; females 67.7%) in 1980.

Tourism

The main tourist attractions are the magnificent sandy beaches, oriental architecture and remains of the Roman Empire. Tunisia contains the site of the ancient Phoenician city of Carthage. Tourism has expanded rapidly, following extensive government investment in hotels, improved roads and other facilities. There were 1,438,872 visitors in 1983, when tourist receipts totalled 389.2m. dinars.

Public Holidays

1985: 1 May (Labour Day), 1 June (Victory Day), 2 June (Youth Day), 20 June (Id ul Fitr, end of Ramadam), 25 July (Republic Day), 3 August (Birthday of President Bourguiba), 13 August (Women's Day), 27 August (Id ul Adha, Feast of the Sacrifice), 3 September (Commemoration of 3 September 1934), 16 September (Islamic New Year), 15 October (Evacuation of Bizerta), 25 November (Mouloud, Birth of the Prophet).

1986: 1 January (New Year's Day), 18 January (National Revolution Day), 20 March (Independence Day), 9 April (Martyrs' Day).

Directory

The Constitution

A new Constitution for the Republic of Tunisia was promulgated on 1 June 1959. Its main provisions are summarized below:

NATIONAL ASSEMBLY

Legislative power is exercised by the National Assembly, which is elected (at the same time as the President) every five years by direct universal suffrage. Every citizen who has had Tunisian nationality for at least five years and who has attained 20 years of age has the right to vote. The National Assembly shall hold two sessions every year, each session lasting not more than three months. Additional meetings may be held at the demand of the President or of a majority of the deputies.

HEAD OF STATE

The President of the Republic is both Head of State and Head of the Executive. He must be not less than 40 years of age. There is no limit to the number of terms a President may serve. The President is also the Commander-in-Chief of the army and makes both civil and military appointments. The Government may be censured by the National Assembly, in which case the President may dismiss the Assembly and hold fresh elections. If censured by the new Assembly thus elected, the Government must resign. Should the Presidency fall vacant for any reason before the end of a President's term of office, the Prime Minister shall assume the Presidency until the end of the term.

COUNCIL OF STATE

Comprises two judicial bodies: an administrative body dealing with legal disputes between individuals and State or public bodies, and an audit office to verify the accounts of the State and submit reports.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL

Deals with economic and social planning and studies projects submitted by the National Assembly. Members are grouped in seven categories representing various sections of the community.

TUVALU

Introductory Survey

Location, Climate, Language, Religion, Flag, Capital

Tuvalu is a scattered group of nine small atolls (including one which is generally uninhabited), extending about 560 km (350 miles) from north to south, in the western Pacific Ocean. Its nearest neighbours are Fiji to the south, Kiribati to the north and Solomon Islands to the west. The climate is warm and pleasant, with a mean annual temperature of 29°C (84°F), and there is very little seasonal variation. The average annual rainfall is about 3,000 mm (120 in). The inhabitants speak Tuvaluan and English. Almost all of them profess Christianity, and about 98% are Protestants. The national flag (proportions 2 by 1) is light blue, with the United Kingdom flag as a rectangular canton in the upper hoist, occupying one-quarter of the area, and nine five-pointed yellow stars (arranged to symbolize a map of the archipelago) in the fly. The capital is on Funafuti atoll.

Recent History

Tuvalu was formerly known as the Ellice (or Lagoon) Islands. Between about 1850 and 1875 many of the islanders were captured by slave-traders and this, together with European diseases, reduced the population from about 20,000 to 3,000. In 1877 the United Kingdom established the Western Pacific High Commission (WPHC), with its headquarters in Fiji, and the Ellice Islands and other groups were placed under its jurisdiction. In 1892 a British protectorate was declared over the Ellice Islands and the group was linked administratively with the Gilbert Islands to the north. In 1916 the United Kingdom annexed the protectorate, which was renamed the Gilbert and Ellice Islands Colony (GEIC). During the Japanese occupation of the Gilbert Islands in 1942–43, the administration of the GEIC was temporarily moved to Funafuti in the Ellice Islands. (For more details of the history of the GEIC, see the chapter on Kiribati, p. 1978.)

A series of advisory and legislative bodies prepared the GEIC for self-government. In May 1974 the last of these, the Legislative Council, was replaced by a House of Assembly, with 28 elected members (including eight Ellice Islanders) and three official members. A Chief Minister was elected by the House and chose between four and six other Ministers, one of whom had to be from the Ellice Islands.

In January 1972 the appointment of a separate GEIC Governor, who assumed most of the functions previously exercised by the High Commissioner for the Western Pacific, increased the long-standing anxiety of the Ellice Islanders over their minority position as Polynesians in the colony, dominated by the Micronesians of the Gilbert Islands. In a referendum held in the Ellice Islands in August and September 1974, more than 90% of the voters favoured separate status for the group, and in October 1975 the Ellice Islands, under the old native name of Tuvalu ('eight standing together'), became a separate British dependency. The Deputy Governor of the GEIC took office as Her Majesty's Commissioner for Tuvalu. The eight Ellice representatives in the GEIC House of Assembly became the first elected members of the new Tuvalu House of Assembly. They elected one of their number, Toaripi Lauti, to be Chief Minister. Tuvalu was completely separated from the GEIC administration in January 1976. The remainder of the GEIC was renamed the Gilbert Islands and achieved independence, under the name of Kiribati, in July 1979.

Tuvalu's first separate elections were held in August 1977, when the number of elective seats in the House was increased to 12. An independence constitution was finalized at a conference in London in February 1978. After five months of internal self-government, Tuvalu became independent on 1 October 1978, with Lauti as the first Prime Minister. Like Nauru, Tuvalu is a 'special member' of the Commonwealth, not represented at meetings of Heads of Government.

In April 1979 it was reported that Tuvalu had signed a treaty of friendship with the USA, which in 1983 formally renounced its claim, dating from 1856, to the four southernmost atolls. Following elections to the House of Assembly in September 1981, Dr Tomasi Puapua became Prime Minister. The main election issue was the lack of information about government funds which had been entrusted to a Californian businessman for investment in the USA soon after independence; the funds, together with interest accrued, were reported to have been returned to Tuvalu in 1984. Tuvalu hosted the annual conference of the South Pacific Forum (see p. 203) in August 1984.

Government

Tuvalu is a constitutional monarchy. Executive authority is vested in the British sovereign, as Head of State, and is exercisable by her representative, the Governor-General, who is appointed on the recommendation of the Prime Minister and acts, in almost all cases, on the advice of the Cabinet. Legislative power is vested in the unicameral Parliament, with 12 members elected by universal adult suffrage for four years (subject to dissolution). The Cabinet is led by the Prime Minister, who is elected by and from the members of Parliament. On the Prime Minister's recommendation, other Ministers are appointed by the Governor-General. The Cabinet is responsible to Parliament. Each of the inhabited atolls has an elected Island Council which is responsible for local government.

Economic Affairs

Tuvalu is composed of coral atolls with poor quality soil. Most of the land is covered with coconut palms, which provide the only export in the form of copra. There is subsistence farming of coconuts, pigs and poultry. Small-scale fishing is carried out and it is hoped that, with the introduction in December 1983 of an exclusive economic zone extending 200 nautical miles (370 km) from the coasts and covering about 1.3m. sq km (500,000 sq miles) of sea, exploitation of fish resources can be developed to form the basis of the economy. Other foreign exchange is earned from the sale of postage stamps and from remittances sent home by Tuvaluans working abroad, mainly in the phosphate industry on Nauru, or on foreign ships. About one-quarter of the labour force was overseas in the 1970s. The United Kingdom agreed to continue financial assistance after independence, with a $A4.7m. special development grant, $A4.9m. in general development aid for three years and $A1.7m. in budgetary aid for 1979/80. General development aid was extended in 1980, and budgetary aid of $A810,000 for 1981 and $A900,000 for 1982 was agreed. A business development advisory bureau was set up in 1982, funded by an ex gratia payment from the British Phosphate Commission, to assist local people who wish to establish businesses.

Transport and Communications

Tuvalu has one airport and one shipping port of entry on Funafuti. There are no metalled roads.

Social Welfare

A 36-bed hospital was opened in 1978 on Funafuti, while each inhabited atoll has a dispensary.

Education

Education is provided by the Government, and all children receive primary education. In 1982 1,269 pupils attended the nine primary schools (one on each atoll), and in 1981 275 attended the secondary school at Motufoua, Vaitupu. Further training or vocational courses are available in Fiji and Kiribati.

Tourism

Because of their remoteness, the islands have attracted only a very small number of tourists. Tuvalu has only one hotel, on Funafuti.

Public Holidays

1985: 10 June (Queen's Official Birthday), 5 August (first Monday in August), 1 October (Tuvalu Day, anniversary of independence), 14 November (Prince of Wales's Birthday), 25–26 December (Christmas).

1986: 1 January (New Year), 10 March (Commonwealth Day), 31 March (Easter Monday).

Currency and Exchange Rates

Tuvaluan and Australian currency (at par with each other) are both in use.

100 cents = 1 Tuvaluan dollar; 100 cents = 1 Australian dollar ($A).

Exchange rates (31 December 1984):
£1 sterling = $A 1.403;
US $1 = $A 1.2115.

Statistical Survey

AREA AND POPULATION

Land Area: 26 sq km (10 sq miles).

Population: 7,349 at census of May 1979. In addition, there were about 2,000 Tuvaluans living overseas.

Economically Active Population: In 1979 there were 936 people in paid employment, 50% of them in government service. In 1979 114 Tuvaluans were employed by the Nauru Phosphate Co, with a smaller number employed in Kiribati and about 255 on foreign ships.

FINANCE

Currency and Exchange Rates: Australian and Tuvaluan currencies are both in use. Australian currency: 100 cents = 1 Australian dollar ($A). Coins: 1, 2, 5, 10, 20 and 50 cents. Notes: 1, 2, 5, 10, 20 and 50 dollars. Tuvaluan currency: 100 cents = 1 Tuvaluan dollar. Coins: 1, 2, 5, 10, 20 and 50 cents; 1 and 5 dollars. Sterling and US Dollar Equivalents (31 December 1984): £1 sterling = $A1.403; US $1 = $A1.2115; $A100 = £71.26 = US $82.54. Average Exchange Rate (US $ per Australian dollar): 1.1493 in 1981; 1.0174 in 1982; 0.9025 in 1983.

Budget (1983): Expenditure $A3,500,000, of which $A950,000 was British grant-in-aid. The remainder, $A2,550,000, was expected to include personal tax revenue of $A160,000, customs duties of $A506,000 and philately sales $A594,512.

Development (1983): $A7.1m. derived from grant and loan funds from the United Kingdom, New Zealand, Australia, Canada, Japan, the Federal Republic of Germany, the EDF and UNDP.

In 1982 the Government planned to spend $A156,140 on social services and education, $A948,166 on commerce and natural resources, $A180,022 on communications and works.

EXTERNAL TRADE

1982: Imports: $A2,890,377 (Food and live animals $A647,848; Mineral fuels, lubricants, etc. $A484,525; Basic manufactures $A553,348; Machinery and transport equipment $A464,299). Exports: $A36,766 (Copra $A26,671; Cine films re-exported $A10,095). The principal trading partners were Fiji (47.5% of total trade), Australia (39.7%) and New Zealand (5.3%).

Directory

The Constitution

A new Constitution came into effect at independence on 1 October 1978. Its main provisions are as follows:

The Constitution states that Tuvalu is a democratic sovereign state and that the Constitution is the Supreme Law. It guarantees protection of all fundamental rights and freedoms and provides for the determination of citizenship.

The British sovereign is represented by the Governor-General, who must be a citizen of Tuvalu and is appointed on the recommendation of the Prime Minister. The Prime Minister is elected by Parliament, and up to four other Ministers are appointed by the Governor-General from among the members of Parliament, after consultation with the Prime Minister. The Cabinet, which is directly responsible to Parliament, consists of the Prime Minister and the other Ministers whose functions are to advise the Governor-General upon the government of Tuvalu. The Attorney-General is the principal legal adviser to the Government. Parliament is composed of 12 members directly elected by universal adult suffrage for four years, subject to dissolution, and is presided over by a Speaker elected by the members. The Constitution also provides for the operation of a Judiciary (see Judicial System) and for an independent Public Service.

The Government

Head of State: HM Queen Elizabeth II.

Governor-General: Sir Fiatau Penitala Teo (took office 1 October 1978).

Prime Minister, Minister for Civil Service Administration and Local Government and Minister for Foreign Affairs: Dr Tomasi Puapua.

Deputy Prime Minister and Minister for Finance: Henry F. Naisali.

Minister for Social Services: Falaile Pilitati.

Minister for Commerce and Natural Resources: Lale Seluka.

Minister for Works and Communications: Solomona Metia Tealofi.

MINISTRIES

All Ministries are in Vaiaku, Funafuti.

Legislature

PARLIAMENT

Parliament has 12 members who hold office for a term of up to four years. The most recent elections were held in September 1981. There are no political parties.

Speaker: Vasa Vave Founuku.

Judicial System

The Supreme Law is embodied in the Constitution. The High Court is the superior court of record, presided over by the Chief Justice, and has jurisdiction to hear appeals from judgments of the Magistrates' Courts and the Island Courts. Appeals from the High Court lie with the Court of Appeal in Fiji or, in the ultimate case, with the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council in the United Kingdom.

There are eight Island Courts with limited jurisdiction in criminal and civil cases.

UGANDA

Introductory Survey

Location, Climate, Language, Religion, Flag, Capital

The Republic of Uganda is an equatorial country in East Africa, bordered by Sudan to the north, Zaire to the west, Kenya to the east and Rwanda, Tanzania and Lake Victoria to the south. The climate is tropical, with temperatures, moderated by the altitude of the country, varying between 15° and 30°C. The official language is English and there are many local languages, the most important of which is Luganda. More than 60% of the population follow Christian beliefs. There is a small Muslim minority. The national flag (proportions 3 by 2) has six horizontal stripes: black, gold, red, black, gold and red. In the centre is a white disc containing a crested crane. The capital is Kampala.

Recent History

Formerly a British protectorate, Uganda became an independent member of the Commonwealth on 9 October 1962. The Government was led by Dr Milton Obote, leader of the Uganda People's Congress (UPC) since 1960 and Prime Minister since April 1962. At independence the country comprised four regions, including the kingdom of Buganda, which had federal status. Exactly a year after independence Uganda became a republic, with Mutesa II, Kabaka (King) of Buganda, as first President. Executive power remained with the Cabinet. By 1966 rivalry between the UPC and the followers of the Kabaka was intense, and in February Dr Obote led a successful pre-emptive coup against the President. In April Dr Obote became executive President. In September 1967 a new constitution was introduced, establishing a unitary republic, and Buganda was brought under the control of the central government. After an assassination attempt on President Obote in December 1969, all opposition parties were banned.

President Obote was overthrown in January 1971 by the Army, led by Maj.-Gen. (later Field Marshal) Idi Amin Dada, who assumed full executive powers and suspended political activity. The National Assembly was dissolved in February, when Amin declared himself Head of State, took over legislative powers and suspended parts of the 1967 constitution. Obote took refuge in Tanzania, whose support for him led to disputes within the East African Community and clashes between Ugandan and Tanzanian troops on the border. In August 1972 Amin proclaimed an 'economic war' to free Uganda from foreign domination, particularly that of British interests and of British Asians resident in Uganda, and the mass expulsion of non-citizen Asians strained relations with the United Kingdom. In September 1972 an attempted invasion of Uganda by supporters of Obote was repulsed.

In February 1976 Amin claimed that large areas of western Kenya were historically part of Uganda; the frontier was temporarily closed and a virulent propaganda campaign ensued. Conflict was only narrowly averted in July, after Amin accused Kenya of co-operating in an Israeli commando raid to free Jewish hostages from an airliner which was hijacked to Entebbe airport by pro-Palestinian guerrillas. The United Kingdom severed relations with Uganda over the murder of one of the hostages after the raid.

The ruthless elimination of suspected opponents, mass flights of refugees to neighbouring countries and periodic purges of the army, on whose support the regime depended, became a focus of world indignation when the Anglican Archbishop of Uganda and two cabinet ministers were murdered in February 1977.

Uganda annexed the Kagera salient from Tanzania in November 1978. An invasion force consisting of Tanzanian regular troops and Ugandan exiles crossed into Uganda and rapidly gained control of the southern region. Amin's forces capitulated in spite of military aid and reinforcements from Libya, and in April 1979 a Tanzanian assault force entered Kampala, meeting little resistance. Sporadic fighting continued in northern Uganda, but the remaining pro-Amin troops were defeated in June. Amin fled initially to Libya, and in 1980 found refuge in Saudi Arabia.

A provisional government, the National Executive Council (NEC), was set up in April 1979 from the ranks of the Uganda National Liberation Front (UNLF), with Dr Yusuf Lule as President. When Dr Lule attempted to reshuffle the NEC in June, opposition from the National Consultative Council (NCC), a provisional parliament set up by the UNLF, and complaints to President Nyerere of Tanzania forced his resignation. Dr Lule was succeeded by Godfrey Binaisa, who was in turn overthrown by the Military Commission of the UNLF in May 1980 after he had decided to allow only UNLF members to stand in the elections set for December 1980 and attempted to dismiss the Chief of the Ugandan Army, Brig. David Oyite Ojok, a prominent Obote supporter. (Maj.-Gen. Oyite Ojok, as he became, was killed in a helicopter crash in December 1983.)

The Military Commission, under its Chairman, Paulo Muwanga, established an Electoral Commission to organize and supervise the national elections. Four parties contested the elections, which were won by the UPC, with Obote becoming President again. However, the defeated parties, particularly the Democratic Party (DP) led by Paul Ssemogerere and gaining most of its support from the Baganda people, complained of gross electoral malpractices by UPC supporters, both before and after voting, including: preventing the nomination of opponents of the UPC in 17 constituencies, and intervention by Muwanga (after the DP had claimed victory), who suspended the results and personally determined whether each individual election was valid. A team of Commonwealth observers made several criticisms of the conduct of the elections, but described them as 'a valid electoral exercise'.

The Obote Government, in which Muwanga was named Vice-President and Minister of Defence, has come under constant attack from opposition groups in exile and guerrilla groups operating inside the country. In January 1982 the Uganda Popular Front (UPF) was formed to co-ordinate, from its London base, the activities of the main exile groups aiming to overthrow the Obote Government. These groups were the Uganda Freedom Movement (led by Balaki Kiriya), the National Resistance Movement (led by Dr Lule and his former Defence Minister, Yoweri Museveni) and the Uganda National Rescue Front (led by Moses Ali, who was a minister in Amin's government but who claims no allegiance to Amin now). Godfrey Binaisa was appointed a joint leader of the UPF in his own right. Kiriya was subsequently arrested (he claims to have been kidnapped in Kenya) and charged with treason in Kampala. The case was dismissed by a High Court judge in December 1984, but Kiriya was immediately rearrested. Dr Lule died in London in January 1985.

The most serious threat to Obote is the continuing anti-government guerrilla activity, which began in February 1981 with a series of attacks on police and army installations. Hundreds of President Obote's opponents were subsequently detained, including DP members of the National Assembly, and several newspapers were banned. Following the withdrawal of Tanzanian troops in June, there were reports from the West Nile Region (Amin's homeland) of further atrocities by Ugandan soldiers. The National Resistance Army (NRA) led by Museveni, is, in effect, the UPF's military wing and operates in the Luwero, Mubende and Mpigi districts, north and west of Kampala. In West Nile the Uganda National Rescue Front has been active, but on a smaller scale.

In 1982 an estimated 200,000 Ugandans were reported to have fled to Sudan, Rwanda and Zaire, to escape armed clashes and government reprisals. The exodus continued throughout 1983, and it was reported that Ugandan soldiers were crossing the border and attacking refugees in southern Sudan. Although the Government claimed by late 1983 that the refugees were returning home, the situation was very unclear, and relief workers reported that many Ugandans were coming back to the camps, having found that the situation in their home areas was still very dangerous. Uganda and Rwanda agreed in March 1983 to co-operate in solving the problem of ethnic Rwandan refugees on both sides of their border. Tens of thousands of ethnic Rwandans, some of them having lived in Uganda for generations, were forcibly moved from their homes into makeshift camps by local Ugandan authorities in 1982. Some fled across the border into Rwanda, and others to Tanzania.

In March 1983 the NRA warned foreigners to leave Uganda, prior to its launching of a new offensive to counter the army's anti-guerrilla campaign. In the Luwero district north of Kampala, hundreds of civilians, including many women and children, were killed during attacks on refugee camps there in May. The NRA denied involvement in the massacres. More than 100,000 people were displaced, and were unable to plant new crops. International aid agencies intensified relief operations, supplying food and medical care, but, for several months, they were prevented by the army from reaching the camps sheltering the displaced people. The guerrillas could not survive without help from the local inhabitants but it is likely that this is mostly obtained through intimidation.

Although, by late 1983, the Government could claim, with some justification, that the security situation as a whole was greatly improved, there were severe set-backs in 1984. The worst single incidence of violence occurred in May, when about 100 men, women and children were massacred, reportedly by government troops, at a theological college near Kampala. The Government admitted that its soldiers might have been responsible for some of the killings. In August a US government spokesman accused Ugandan troops of having killed, or intentionally starved to death, up to 200,000 people in the three years of the anti-insurgency operations in the 'Luwero triangle', and he alleged that the army was out of the Government's control. The allegations were strongly denied by the Government and were regarded as greatly exaggerated by many observers, including the UK's diplomatic mission in Kampala.

In October 1983, to mark Uganda's 21st independence anniversary, President Obote ordered the release of 2,100 detainees, including alleged anti-Government guerrillas and soldiers who fought under Amin. Owing to the security situation, the Democratic Party boycotted the November 1983 by-elections, as a result of which all eight vacant seats in the National Assembly were won by the UPC. The UPC's position was further strengthened in early 1984, when the DP split over the election of party officers. The formation of a breakaway party, the Nationalist Liberal Party, was announced in June 1984 by the DP's former Vice-President, Tiberio Okeny. General elections were due to be held by December 1985 at the latest.

Government

Following national elections held in December 1980, Uganda returned to a multi-party parliamentary system, under the 1967 Constitution, as subsequently amended, which the Court of Appeal declared to be valid in October 1980. Legislative power is vested in the National Assembly, with 136 members: 10 nominated to represent the armed forces and 126 directly elected by universal adult suffrage. The leader of the majority party becomes President.

Defence

An occupying force of some 20,000 members of the Tanzanian People's Defence Forces operated in Uganda after the defeat of President Amin's troops. By mid-1981 most of the Tanzanian troops had withdrawn, but about 1,000 remained to guard road-blocks and key security posts. In 1985 there were still several hundred Tanzanian, as well as North Korean, military advisers and instructors in the country. A Commonwealth military training team carried out an intensive programme from 1982 to 1984, training nearly 4,000 officers and men. The UK, which took part in the programme, also has a 12-man training team, based at Jinja, and in August 1984 the British Government signed an agreement to continue this assistance. The Ugandan armed forces were estimated at 18,000 men in July 1984. There is a police force of about 3,000, which has received some training assistance from the UK, and a special security force. Defence expenditure was estimated at US $94m. in 1982.

Economic Affairs

Agriculture, the most important sector of Uganda's economy, provides a livelihood for nearly 90% of the population. Internal insecurity hindered international efforts to ease the serious famine which caused thousands of deaths in northern Uganda in 1979–80, while drought and cattle rustling badly damaged the livestock industry. The main food crops are plantains (matoke), cassava, sweet potatoes, beans and cereals. The chief export crops are coffee (which usually provides more than 90% of Uganda's total export earnings), tea and cotton. Sugar cane, cocoa and tobacco are the other main cash crops, and small amounts are exported.

During the rule of President Amin, all foreign-owned lands, sugar, tea, coffee and cotton industries and estates were nationalized without compensation. Non-citizen Asians, who had a prominent share in commerce, were expelled, and their assets were distributed among soldiers and military police. As a result, foreign aid dwindled, and there was a severe shortage of skilled personnel. After 1979, however, this policy was reversed, and foreign companies have taken an interest in reviving Ugandan agriculture and industry. Prominent Asian entrepreneurs have been welcomed back to Uganda, and in February 1983 legislation to restore to non-citizens (mainly Asians) property expropriated by the Amin regime became effective.

During the 1970s there was virtually no real growth in Ugandan GDP. Production of important cash crops, particularly tea, tobacco, cotton and sugar, had by the end of the decade declined to a fraction of their production at its beginning. In an effort to stimulate production, substantial increases have been made in producer prices for export crops. Many plantations and processing plants are undergoing rehabilitation after being run down during the Amin period. The World Bank, the European Development Fund and the ADB, as well as the main bilateral donors (the UK, the USA, Italy and the Federal Republic of Germany), are making available substantial aid towards this purpose.

Coffee production declined from more than 200,000 metric tons per year in the early 1970s to only 120,000 tons in 1979, resulting in a serious shortage of foreign exchange. There was some improvement in 1980/81, however, and in 1981/82 Uganda was able to meet its export quota under the International Coffee Agreement (ICA). The 1982/83 crop reached 180,000 metric tons, as a result of which Uganda succeeded in raising its annual ICA export quota to 144,000 tons. The basic ICA quota for 1983/84 was 2.31m. bags (each of 60 kg), and production for that year was 3.1m. bags, leaving considerable stocks even after some of the surplus had been sold on the non-quota market. The 1984/85 quota was fixed at 2,599,000 bags. Most of Uganda's coffee is of the robusta variety.

Uganda's peak annual output of made tea was 23,376 metric tons in 1972, when it was second only to Kenya among African tea-producing countries. Following nationalization of the tea plantations in 1972, output fell drastically. In 1980 production was only 1,533 tons, but in 1983 it increased to 3,169 tons. In 1982 only 300 tons of cocoa (10% of output) were exported, owing to inadequate transport facilities. Tobacco exports were resumed in 1983.

Uganda was formerly one of the leading cotton-producing countries in Africa. Its peak annual output of cotton lint was 467,000 bales (each of 400 lb or 181.4 kg) in 1970, but production declined to only 15,100 bales in 1980. A major programme to restore Uganda's cotton ginneries is under way, but rehabilitation of the crop has been slower than expected.

Copper, mined at Kilembe, was once an important export, but production had ceased by 1980. A US $100m. plan to restart the mines and build a new smelter has been approved by the Government, and it is proposed that cobalt and sulphuric acid will be extracted from the stockpile of copper pyrites. The sulphuric acid would be used in a proposed superphosphate fertilizer plant, with phosphates from the Sukulu hills. The Owen Falls hydroelectric station, which has an installed capacity of 150 MW and generates almost all of the country's electricity, is to be modernized and expanded in a US $60m. programme. Uganda supplies 30 MW to Kenya and has agreed, in principle, to supply electricity to northern Tanzania.

Upon taking office in 1980, the main priority for President Obote's Government was the restoration of international confidence in the country. Negotiations with Tanzania and Kenya on the dispute over Ugandan debts and the assets of the East African Community, which was dissolved in 1977, reached agreement in November 1983. Improved relations with Kenya removed barriers to the export of landlocked Ugandan coffee. Other problems which the Government has attempted to tackle include the corruption of 'black market' trading, in which basic foodstuffs are sold at exorbitant prices, and a persistently high rate of inflation. The 'floating' of the shilling in June 1981 effectively led to a massive devaluation of the currency, but restored some stability to the economy. In August 1982 a two-tier exchange rate was introduced in a further effort to increase foreign confidence in the shilling and to undermine 'black market' currency dealings. In June 1984 the dual exchange rate was ended, since the gap between the two rates had narrowed, as the Government had intended. The value of the shilling subsequently fell steadily, from 300 per US dollar in June to 565 per dollar by early December.

By late 1983 the rate of inflation had fallen to under 30%, compared with over 100% in 1980, but increases in prices and wages, combined with the falling value of the shilling, pushed inflation up again to about 70% by late 1984. In 1983 the IMF approved a third one-year stand-by arrangement (of SDR 95m.) to support the Government's economic programme. However, negotiations on a new stand-by facility of US $59.8m., to replace the one ended in September 1984, seemed to have reached deadlock by March 1985. The World Bank approved a third reconstruction credit, of US $50m., in May 1984, bringing its total pledged loans to Uganda since 1981 to US $479m., although only about US $140m. had been disbursed by the end of 1984. Uganda's total external debt at the end of 1983 was about US $500m. The trade deficit in that year was estimated at US $167m., but the effect on the balance of payments is offset by the large amount of aid money flowing in.

Uganda's gross domestic product (GDP) declined, in real terms, by 11.9% in 1979, and by a further 3.4% in 1980. GDP grew by 3.9% in 1981, by 8.2% in 1982, and by 7.3% in 1983. In the latter year, however, real GDP was still lower than the annual level of 1971–74. A revised economic recovery programme for 1983–85 was announced in November 1983. It was envisaged that GDP would continue to expand by about 6% annually. Industry was allocated 35% of the programme's resources, and agriculture was to receive 27%. The large-scale industrial sector was expected to grow by 40% in 1983/84 and by 25% in 1984/85 (industry was operating at only 30% of capacity in 1982). The sugar industry was to be given priority, with an investment of US$77m. The programme required additional finance of US $199m., in addition to the US $557.5m. needed under the original programme covering 1982–84, which had concentrated on boosting the export commodity sector. A medium-term investment programme was to be presented to a meeting of potential aid donors in June 1985, focusing more on growth and development than on rehabilitation.

Transport and Communications

Uganda had 1,286 km of railways and 7,740 km of main roads in 1982. Owing to the poor condition of many of the major roads, a ban was imposed on their use by vehicles weighing more than 35 metric tons from neighbouring countries. The transport system deteriorated after the expulsion by President Amin of the Asians, who had largely controlled it, but, with the help of foreign aid, a reconstruction programme is now under way. A rail wagon ferry service on Lake Victoria, linking Jinja with the Tanzanian port of Mwanza, was inaugurated in 1983. Air transport from Entebbe airport (renamed Apolo Milton Obote airport in October 1984) is provided by the Uganda Airlines Corporation and other carriers.

Social Welfare

The health service was adversely affected by the departure of foreign personnel in 1972. Uganda had one physician for every 26,810 inhabitants in 1980, compared with one for every 15,050 in 1960. In 1984–85 the Government planned to spend US $15m. on the rehabilitation of hospitals, dispensaries and health centres. In 1975 Uganda had 420 hospital establishments, with a total of 18,156 beds.

Education

Education is sponsored by the Government and by missions, and most schools are Government-financed or aided, although education is not compulsory. Primary education begins at six years of age and lasts for seven years. Secondary education, beginning at the age of 13, lasts for a further six years. It was estimated that the proportion of primary school-age children attending school in 1984 was about 54% of boys and 42% of girls. The national university is Makerere University, in Kampala.

Tourism

The forests, lakes and mountains are the main tourist features, but under President Amin's regime the tourist trade ceased. There were only 3,600 tourist arrivals in 1981, compared with 85,000 10 years earlier. The number rose in 1982 to 8,622 tourists, mainly from Italy and Scandinavia, and earnings totalled US $2.1m. In 1983 there were 12,786 tourist arrivals. The economic recovery programme includes plans to rehabilitate the neglected national parks and to renovate the lodges, as well as the state-owned hotels in Kampala.

Public Holidays

1985: 1 May (Labour Day), 3 June (Martyrs' Day), 20 June (Id ul Fitr, end of Ramadan), 27 August (Id ul Adha, Feast of the Sacrifice), 9 October (Independence Day), 25 December (Christmas).

1986: 1 January (New Year's Day), 25 March (anniversary of the formation of the UNFL), 28–31 March (Easter).

Directory

The Constitution

According to the Constitution of 8 September 1967, Uganda has an executive President who is Head of State, Leader of the Government and Commander-in-Chief of the Armed Forces. The Parliament is the supreme legislature, and consists of the President and a National Assembly of 82 elected members (raised to 126 in 1980). The Constitution provides for some specially elected members as may be required to give the party having the greatest numerical strength of elected members a majority of not more than 10 of all the members of the National Assembly. The Constitution may be amended by a majority of not less than two-thirds of the National Assembly.

The Constitution was amended by the Military Commission of the Uganda National Liberation Front between May and December 1980. The Court of Appeal ruled in October 1980 that the 1967 Constitution, as amended, was still valid.

Legislature

NATIONAL ASSEMBLY

The Constitution provides for a National Assembly of 126 elected members. Uganda's first elected legislature since 1971 assembled on 23 December 1980. Ten additional members have been nominated to represent the Uganda National Liberation Army.

Speaker: Francis Butagira.

Election, 10–11 December 1980

Party	Seats*
Uganda People's Congress (UPC)	74
Democratic Party (DP)	51
Uganda Patriotic Movement (UPM)†	1

* By the end of November 1983, after several defections by DP members to the UPC, and eight by-elections in seats which had fallen vacant, total representation was as follows: DP 35, UPC 100 (including 10 nominated members from the Uganda National Liberation Army), vacant 1.

† The UPM, founded in 1980, subsequently ceased to exist as a political party when its leader, YOWERI MUSEVENI, went into armed revolt against the Government, as leader of the National Resistance Army (NRA).

Political Organizations

Political activity outside the Uganda National Liberation Front, the broad coalition of former exiles and opponents of President Amin's regime, was banned in May 1979. After the Military Commission of the UNLF assumed executive power in a bloodless coup in May 1980, the ban on party-political activity was reversed. Four parties contested the national elections held in December 1980.

Conservative Party (CP): f. 1979; Leader J. MAYANJANKANGI, (Prime Minister of the then Kingdom of Buganda from 1964–66); won no seats in 1980 elections.

Democratic Party (DP): POB 1658, Kampala; f. 1953; banned in 1969 when UPC created a one-party state; favours mixed economy and a national govt; widespread support, particularly in southern Uganda; Pres.-Gen. PAUL SSEMOGERERE; Sec.-Gen. ROBERT KITARIKO.

Nationalist Liberal Party: Kampala; f. 1984 as breakaway party from the DP; Leader TIBERIO OKENY.

Uganda People's Congress (UPC): POB 1951, Kampala; f. 1960; socialist-inclined party; advocates mixed economy; ruling party 1962–71, sole legal political party in 1969–71; returned to power after elections held in December 1980; Leader Dr APOLO MILTON OBOTE; Sec.-Gen. Dr LUWULIZA KIRUNDA.

THE UNITED ARAB EMIRATES

Introductory Survey

Location, Climate, Language, Religion, Flag, Capital

The United Arab Emirates (UAE) lies in the east of the Arabian peninsula. It is bordered by Saudi Arabia to the west and south, and by Oman to the east. In the north, the UAE has a short frontier with Qatar and a coastline of about 650 km (400 miles) on the southern shore of the Persian (Arabian) Gulf, separated by a detached portion of Omani territory from a small section of coast on the western shore of the Gulf of Oman. The climate is exceptionally hot in summer, with average maximum temperatures exceeding 40°C (104°F), and humidity is very high. Winter is mild, with temperatures ranging from 17°C (62.6°F) to 20°C (68°F). Average annual rainfall is very low: between 100mm (4 in) and 200mm (8 in). The official language is Arabic, spoken by almost all of the native population. Arabs are, however, outnumbered by non-Arab immigrants, mainly from India, Pakistan, Bangladesh and Iran. English is used as a second language in commerce. Most of the inhabitants are Muslims, mainly of the Sunni sect. The national flag (proportions 2 by 1) has three equal horizontal stripes, of green, white and black, with a vertical red stripe at the hoist. The capital is Abu Dhabi.

Recent History

Prior to independence, the UAE was Trucial Oman, also known as the Trucial States, and the component sheikhdoms of the territory were under British protection. The coastal region of the modern UAE was formerly notorious for piracy and lawlessness. In 1820, following attacks on British ships in nearby waters, the United Kingdom and the local Arab rulers concluded a treaty to suppress piracy and slave trading. The peace agreement was strengthened in 1853, when a 'perpetual maritime truce' was concluded. Under this agreement, the Arab sheikhs accepted British protection from outside attack in return for a pledge to refrain from hostilities at sea. The 'Pirate Coast' was accordingly renamed the Trucial Coast. In 1892 the United Kingdom entered into separate, but identical, 'exclusive' treaties with the rulers of the Trucial States, whereby the sheikhdoms became British protectorates. In return, the United Kingdom assumed responsibility for their defence and external relations. The sheikhdoms were otherwise self-governing and followed the traditional form of Arab monarchy, with each ruler having virtually absolute power over his subjects.

In 1952, on British advice, a Trucial Council, comprising the rulers of the seven sheikhdoms, was established. The object of the Council was to encourage the adoption of common policies in administrative matters, possibly leading to a federation of the states. Petroleum, the basis of the area's modern prosperity, was first discovered in 1958, when deposits were located beneath the coastal waters of Abu Dhabi, the largest of the sheikhdoms. Onshore petroleum was found in Abu Dhabi in 1960. Commercial exploitation of petroleum began there in 1962, providing the state with greatly increased revenue. However, Sheikh Shakhbut bin Sultan al-Nahayan, the ruler of Abu Dhabi since 1928, failed to use the income from petroleum royalties to develop his domain. As a result, the ruling family deposed Sheikh Shakhbut in August 1966, replacing him by his younger brother, Sheikh Zayed bin Sultan. Under the rule of Sheikh Zayed, Abu Dhabi became increasingly wealthy. The state was quickly transformed by using income from the petroleum industry for public works and the provision of welfare services. Petroleum was discovered in neighbouring Dubai (the second largest of the Trucial States) in 1966, and production began there in 1969. By using the resultant revenue, that sheikhdom also developed rapidly.

In January 1968 the United Kingdom announced its intention of withdrawing British military forces from the area by 1971. In March 1968 the Trucial States joined nearby Bahrain and Qatar, which were also under British protection, in a Federation of Arab Emirates. It was intended that the Federation should become fully independent, but the interests of Bahrain and Qatar proved to be incompatible with those of the smaller sheikhdoms, and both seceded from the Federation in August 1971 and became separate independent states. Earlier, in July, six of the Trucial States (Abu Dhabi, Dubai, Sharjah, Umm al-Qaiwain, Ajman and Fujairah) had agreed on a federal constitution for achieving independence as the United Arab Emirates (UAE). The United Kingdom accordingly terminated its special treaty relationship with the states, and the UAE became independent on 2 December 1971. The remaining sheikhdom, Ras al-Khaimah, joined the UAE in February 1972. At independence, Sheikh Zayed, the ruler of Abu Dhabi, took office as the first President of the UAE. Sheikh Rashid bin Said al-Maktoum, the ruler of Dubai since 1958, became Vice-President, while his eldest son, Sheikh Maktoum bin Rashid (Crown Prince of Dubai), became Prime Minister.

In January 1972 the ruler of Sharjah, Sheikh Khalid bin Muhammad al-Qasimi, was killed by rebels under the leadership of his cousin, Sheikh Saqr bin Sultan, who had been deposed as the sheikhdom's ruler in June 1965. However, the rebels were defeated, and Sheikh Khalid was succeeded by his brother, Sheikh Sultan bin Muhammad. Production of petroleum began in Sharjah in 1974, although output there is at a much lower level than that of Abu Dhabi or Dubai.

In December 1973 the separate Abu Dhabi Government was disbanded, and a single Federal Council of Ministers remained in control. Further moves towards a unified administration have been achieved only with some difficulty. In August 1976 Sheikh Zayed, disappointed with progress towards centralization, reportedly announced that he was not prepared to accept another five-year term as President. In November, however, the Supreme Council re-elected him unanimously, following agreements granting the Federal Government greater control over defence, intelligence services, immigration, public security and border control. In the new 40-member National Council, inaugurated in March 1977, only seven members of the first five-year session (1971–76) remained.

Owing to a dispute over a senior appointment in February 1978, the forces of Dubai and Ras al-Khaimah refused to accept orders from the Federal Defence Force. Although Ras al-Khaimah has since reintegrated with the Federal Defence Force, Dubai's armed forces effectively remained a separate entity. In March 1979 a 10-point memorandum from the National Council, containing proposals towards unity, was rejected by Dubai, which, together with Ras al-Khaimah, boycotted a meeting of the Supreme Council. In April Sheikh Maktoum resigned as Prime Minister, being replaced by his father, Sheikh Rashid (the ruler of Dubai), who formed a new Council of Ministers in July, while retaining the post of Vice-President. Although Sheikh Rashid's health was declining, both he and Sheikh Zayed were re-elected to their posts by the Supreme Council in November 1981. By 1984 the worsening health of Sheikh Rashid had led to a transfer of power to his four sons, and, as a result, federal affairs have been neglected, causing some general confusion in the internal affairs of the UAE.

The UAE was a founder member of the Gulf Co-operation Council (GCC, see p. 127) in May 1981. The GCC aims to achieve greater political and economic integration between Gulf countries, and in November 1983 the UAE took part in the GCC's 'Peninsula Shield' joint military exercises, held in Oman.

Since the Arab–Israeli war of October 1973, when it strongly supported the Arab cause, the UAE has contributed large sums of aid to Arab countries. Despite giving aid to Iraq in the Iran–Iraq war which broke out in September 1980, diplomatic relations with Iran have been maintained, and the UAE has offered to mediate between the two countries. In late 1983 Sheikh Zayed mediated between Iraq and Syria, and the UAE also played a part in a GCC initiative to halt fighting between rival Palestinian forces in the Lebanese port of Tripoli. In March 1984, as fighting in the Iran–Iraq war escalated to include attacks on shipping in the Gulf, the UAE joined the GCC in its request that the UN attempt to mediate between Iran and Iraq.

Government

The highest federal authority is the Supreme Council of Rulers, comprising the hereditary rulers of the seven emirates, each of whom is virtually an absolute monarch in his own domain. Decisions of the Supreme Council require the approval of at least five members, including the rulers of both Abu Dhabi and Dubai. From its seven members, the Supreme Council elects a President and a Vice-President. The President appoints a Prime Minister and a Federal Council of Ministers, responsible to the Supreme Council, to hold executive authority. The legislature is the Federal National Council, a consultative assembly (comprising 40 members appointed for two years by the emirates) which considers laws proposed by the Council of Ministers. There are no political parties. In local affairs, each ruler has considerable autonomy.

Defence

In July 1984 the armed forces totalled 43,000 men: an army of 40,000, an air force of 1,500 and a navy of 1,500. The Union Defence Force and the armed forces of Abu Dhabi, Dubai, Ras al-Khaimah and Sharjah were formally merged in May 1976, although Abu Dhabi and Dubai still maintain a degree of independence. Military service is voluntary. Defence expenditure for 1984 was estimated at Dh 6,855m., excluding Dubai's defence expenditure.

Economic Affairs

The UAE is a largely barren country, with extreme climatic conditions. Rainfall is sparse, and most of the land is sand desert or salt flats, permitting only limited cultivation. In the past, the inhabitants traditionally depended on fishing, pearl-diving and trading. However, the exploitation of the UAE's extensive deposits of petroleum has radically transformed the economy and given the country a high level of material prosperity. According to estimates by the World Bank, the UAE's gross national product (GNP), per head (at average 1980–82 prices) was US$23,770 in 1982. This was the highest GNP per head of any country in the world. The high level of average income has been achieved in spite of a rapid increase in the UAE's population, which rose from about 180,000 in 1968 to more than 1.2m. by mid-1983. Encouraged by the UAE's growing wealth, many immigrant workers have arrived, mainly from the Indian sub-continent, and in 1983 it was estimated that over two-thirds of the country's labour force were non-nationals.

In 1984 the UAE's total reserves of petroleum were estimated at 32,400m. barrels. At current levels of production, the reserves would not be exhausted for a further 72 years. Reserves of natural gas were estimated at 2,520,000m. cu m in 1983. The emirates of Abu Dhabi and Dubai together produce almost all of the UAE's petroleum, although in 1983 Dubai supplied less than one-half of Abu Dhabi's total.

The Government of Abu Dhabi, through the Abu Dhabi National Oil Company, acquired a 60% share in the major petroleum-producing operations in 1974. The production of crude petroleum is the responsibility of two companies: one engaged in offshore activities, and the other in onshore work. Both companies are operated in conjunction with overseas partners. The Federal Government completed a 100% take-over of the Dubai Petroleum Co (DPC) group in 1976. By reimbursing all of DPC's previous investments, the Government gained ownership of the oil-producing assets. However, DPC continued as the approved operator, under the terms of the agreement, and the Government continued to buy back the company's production in order to market it directly. The crude petroleum that is produced by the UAE has a low specific gravity. In the 1970s this light, high-quality oil was the most sought-after: by the mid-1980s, however, improved refining technology was beginning to make it less valuable. In 1984 Abu Dhabi was expected to supply 73.9% of federal budget revenue, while Dubai was to contribute 19.8%. Both emirates have pledged to commit one-half of their petroleum income to the federal budget.

The UAE's peak level of petroleum output was achieved in 1977, when 729.5m. barrels were extracted. Production declined slowly until 1980, when the world oil glut forced a sharp fall in output. In 1981 only about 550m. barrels were produced, and total output for 1983 fell to about 420m. barrels. Unified pricing and output quotas, established by OPEC in an attempt to revive weakening world markets for petroleum, have also led to a decline in revenues. The UAE accepted a production 'ceiling' of 1.1m. barrels per day (b/d) in March 1983, to be sold at prices based on OPEC's 'marker' price of US $29 per barrel of light crude. During 1983 and 1984, however, new fields began production in individual emirates, and overall production increased, averaging about 1,230,000 b/d in the first five months of 1984, compared with an estimated 1,029,000 b/d in the corresponding period of the previous year. In response to a dramatic fall in petroleum prices on the spot market in late 1984, OPEC aimed to curb excess capacity by imposing a temporary, lower production ceiling. The UAE agreed to a maximum limit of 950,000 b/d in October. Production in that month averaged around 1.05m. b/d. There were also demands from its petroleum-producing partners for a larger discount on the price of their liftings of petroleum from UAE concessions. In February 1985 OPEC lowered the price for a 'marker' barrel of crude petroleum to $28, and pricing differentials were narrowed. Exports of crude petroleum, which had been valued at Dh67,000m. in 1981, fell to Dh53,100m. in 1982, and to Dh42,000m. in 1983. Federal budgets in recent years have allowed for an annual deficit: this totalled Dh2,718.8m. in 1983/84, rising to a projected Dh4,385m. in the 1984/85 budget. Exports of natural gas contributed Dh5,000m., or 8.8% of total export earnings, in 1982.

Since 1962, when petroleum was first exported (and particularly during the boom years of 1976–80), the area has undergone dramatic change. By 1983 the UAE's total refining capacity was 130,000 b/d, and in June 1984 there were plans to extend this to reach 175,000 b/d by 1987, with possible further expansion bringing refining capacity to 360,000 b/d by 1990. Both Abu Dhabi and Dubai had designated industrial zones, with fertilizers being manufactured in Abu Dhabi, and an aluminium smelter operating in Dubai. Plants to gather and process natural gas were under expansion in 1984, in order to provide a cheaper source of fuel for export. In Dubai, following a major discovery of natural gas in the Margham field which was expected to produce 20,000 b/d of gas liquids by early 1985, the Government had leased all of that emirate's remaining concessions by the end of 1983. In 1985 Dubai's total production was expected to reach 400,000 b/d. Income in Dubai is also generated from entrepôt trading; although depressed by the Iran–Iraq war, this recovered in 1983, being valued at Dh6,000m., compared with Dh3,400m. in the previous year.

Sharjah's contribution to the UAE's total petroleum output had declined from 1.9% in 1976 to 0.5% by 1982. However, following discoveries in the emirate's Sajaa field, output of gas condensate rose to about 59,000 b/d by the end of 1984. There were plans to build factories to manufacture liquefied petroleum gas (LPG) and fertilizers, and to construct an inter-emirate gas grid. The northern emirates have had less economic success. Exploration in Ras al-Khaimah uncovered the country's first commercial oilfield in early 1983. The Saleh 1-X well started production in February 1984 at 5,000 b/d, followed in April by Saleh 2-X at 3,500 b/d. Two further wells were discovered near the island of Halilah, and by late 1984 the first three wells were producing at a rate of 9,000 b/d. Fujairah has quite promising mineral resources. There is a pressing need for improved infrastructure in Ajman, the smallest and least rich emirate, where drilling for petroleum did not begin until 1982.

Agriculture has also received much attention in the UAE. The principal crops are tomatoes, courgettes, cucumbers and aubergines. Three intensive poultry farms were under construction in 1983. The country's output of vegetables increased by 62% per year between 1972 and 1982, and in 1981 agriculture provided Dh773m. of a total GNP of 119,700m. Total subsidies for farming in the 1983 budget were estimated at Dh35m. In 1983–93 the Ministry of Agriculture and Fisheries anticipates investments of Dh1,172m. in farm development. The UAE is expected to reach 100% self-sufficiency in wheat, and 95% in fish, by the year 2000. However, 73% of federal water supplies are consumed by agriculture, and by 1983 the uncontrolled drilling of wells for water had provoked concern about future resources. As a result, two catchment dams were opened in 1982, and a new dam was opened in Fujairah, with a capacity of 10m. cu m of rain water, in 1983.

In 1983 the UAE's balance of payments showed a current surplus of Dh16,700m. However, the general decline in the economy of the UAE, which began in 1981 and was caused by a recession in the world oil market, has continued. In early 1985 the Federal National Council was requested to form a committee to investigate the economic problems of the country, and to find ways of reducing government expenditure.

Transport and Communications

Fast tarmac roads have been constructed between Abu Dhabi and Dubai, between Sharjah and Ras al-Khaimah, and between Sharjah and Dhaid, linking Dubai with other northern emirates and with the interior. Dubai is the UAE's principal port, with harbours at Jebel Ali and Port Rashid, but important harbours are also available at Port Zayed (Abu Dhabi), Port Khalid (Sharjah), Port Saqr (Ras al-Khaimah) and Fujairah. Dubai, Abu Dhabi and Ras al-Khaimah have large international airports, and there is a smaller international airport at Sharjah. A new terminal at Dubai airport is scheduled to be in use by 1986, and the first phase of construction for Fujairah airport was expected to be complete by July 1985.

Social Welfare

Hospital treatment and medical care are provided free to nationals throughout the UAE, and grants are provided for those needing treatment at specialist centres abroad. The UAE had 1,114 physicians in 1980. The Government also operates a system of social welfare benefits. The Ministry of Health aims to provide 5,500 public hospital beds to reduce the ratio of beds per head of population to 1 : 100, and to provide a permanent clinic for each community of more than 1,000 people.

Education

Primary education, which is officially compulsory, begins at six years of age and lasts for six years. Secondary education, starting at the age of 12, also lasts six years, divided into two equal stages. As a proportion of children aged six to 18, the total enrolment at primary and secondary schools was equivalent to 97% in 1981, compared with only 63% in 1970. Primary enrolment included 100% of children in the relevant age-group in 1981. Most of the teachers are from other Arab countries. The UAE has one university, at Al Ain in Abu Dhabi, where 4,200 students were enrolled in 1983, and many other students receive higher education abroad. Adult illiteracy averaged an estimated 46.5% (males 41.6%; females 61.9%) in 1975. To combat this, a Literacy and Adult Education Programme is in operation.

Tourism

Prior to the discovery of petroleum, tourism provided an important source of income. It is an established industry in Sharjah, and there are plans to foster tourism in Dubai. In 1982 there were about 10,000 hotel beds in the UAE.

Public Holidays

1985: 21 May* (First day of Ramadan), 20 June* (Id ul Fitr, end of Ramadan), 6 August (Accession of the Ruler of Abu Dhabi), 27 August* (Id ul Adha, Feast of the Sacrifice), 16 September* (Islamic New Year), 25 November* (Mouloud, Birth of the prophet), 2 December (National Day).

1986: 1 January (New Year's Day), 17 April* (Leilat al Meiraj, Ascension of the Prophet).

Directory

The Constitution

A provisional constitution for the UAE took effect in December 1971. This laid the foundation for the federal structure of the Union of the seven sheikhdoms, previously known as the Trucial States.

The highest federal authority is the Supreme Council of Rulers, which comprises the rulers of the seven emirates. It elects a President and Vice-President from among its members. The President appoints a Prime Minister and a Council of Ministers. The legislature is the Federal National Council, a consultative assembly comprising 40 members appointed by the emirates for a two-year term.

In July 1975 a committee was appointed to draft a permanent federal constitution, but the National Council decided in 1976 to extend the provisional constitution for five years. The provisional constitution was extended for another five years in December 1981. In November 1976, however, the Supreme Council amended Article 142 of the provisional constitution so that the right to levy armed forces was placed exclusively in the hands of the federal government.

Legislature

FEDERAL NATIONAL COUNCIL

Formed under the provisional constitution, it is composed of 40 members from the various Emirates (8 each from Abu Dhabi and Dubai, 6 each from Sharjah and Ras al-Khaimah, and 4 each from Ajman, Fujairah and Umm al-Qaiwain). Each Emirate appoints its own representatives separately. The Council studies laws proposed by the Council of Ministers and can reject them or suggest amendments. The sixth session of the Federal National Council was inaugurated in Abu Dhabi in January 1984.

Speaker: Hilal bin Ahmed Lootah.

Judicial System

The 95th article of the provisional constitution of 1971 provided for the setting up of a Union Supreme Court and Union Primary Tribunals.

The Union has exclusive legislative and executive jurisdiction over all matters that are concerned with the strengthening of the federation such as foreign affairs, defence and Union armed forces, security, finance, communications, traffic control, education, currency, measures, standards and weights, matters relating to nationality and emigration, Union information, etc.

President Sheikh Zayed signed the law establishing the new federal courts on 9 June 1978. The new law effectively transferred local judicial authorities into the jurisdiction of the federal system.

Primary tribunals in Abu Dhabi, Sharjah, Ajman and Fujairah are now primary federal tribunals, and primary tribunals in other towns in those emirates have become circuits of the primary federal tribunals.

The primary federal tribunal may sit in any of the capitals of the four emirates and have jurisdiction on all administrative disputes between the Union and individuals, whether the Union is plaintiff or defendant. Civil disputes between Union and individuals will be heard by primary federal tribunals in the defendant's place of normal residence.

The law requires that all judges take a constitutional oath before the Minister of Justice and Islamic Affairs and that the courts apply the rules of Sharia (Islamic religious laws) and that no judgment contradicts Sharia. All employees of the old judiciaries will be transferred to the federal authority without loss of salary or seniority.

Chief Sharia Justice: Ahmed Abdul Aziz al-Mubarak.

Religion

Most of the inhabitants are Muslims of the Sunni sect. About 20% of the Muslims are Shi'ites.

Transport

ROADS

Roads are rapidly being developed in the United Arab Emirates, and Abu Dhabi and Dubai are linked by a good road which is dual carriageway for most of its length. This road forms part of a west coast route from Shaam, at the UAE border with the northern enclave of Oman, through Dubai and Abu Dhabi to Tarif. An east coast route links Dibba with Muscat. Other roads include the Abu Dhabi–Al-Ain highway and roads linking the northern emirates. An underwater tunnel links Dubai Town and Deira by dual carriageway and pedestrian subway, and a hovercraft service linking Abu Dhabi and Dubai was expected to begin operations in 1984.

SHIPPING

Dubai has been the main commercial centre in the Gulf for many years. In 1968 work was begun on a new artificial deep-water port to supplement the traditional harbour. Port Rashid had been expanded to 37 berths by 1980. Abu Dhabi has also become an important port since the opening of the first section of its artificial harbour, Port Zayed. Eventually it is planned to create 17 deep-water berths and extensive storage facilities. There are smaller ports in Sharjah, Fujairah and Ras al-Khaimah. Work on a dry-dock scheme for Dubai was completed in 1979. It possesses two docks capable of handling 500,000-ton tankers, seven repair berths and a third dock able to accommodate 1,000,000-ton tankers. By 1981 the port of Jebel Ali, Dubai, contained 66 berths. Five deep-water berths were completed at Port Saqr, Ras al-Khaimah, in 1979. Current modernization of Port Khalid in Sharjah will double its berth capacity, and the two-berth port of Fujairah was opened in 1983.

THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA

Introductory Survey

Location, Climate, Language, Religion, Flag, Capital

The United States of America comprises mainly the North American continent between Canada and Mexico. Alaska, to the north-west of Canada, and Hawaii, in the central Pacific Ocean, are two of the 50 States of the USA. The climate varies considerably. Mean annual average temperatures range between 29°C (77°F) in Florida and −13.3°C (10°F) in Alaska. Annual rainfall averages 735 mm (29 in), ranging from 1,410 mm (55.6 in) in Louisiana to 220 mm (8.6 in) in Nevada. Much of Texas, New Mexico, Arizona, Nevada and Utah is desert. The language is English, although there are significant Spanish-speaking minorities, and Christianity is the predominant religion. The national flag (proportions 19 by 10) has 13 alternating stripes (seven red and six white) with a dark blue rectangular canton, containing 50 white five-pointed stars, in the upper hoist. The capital is Washington, DC.

Recent History

The threat of communist advances in Asia, following the Second World War, led the USA to provide most of the support required by UN forces in the Korean War of 1950–1953 and to President Kennedy's promise in 1961 to aid the South Vietnamese. Following Kennedy's assassination in 1963, his successor, Lyndon Johnson, pursued a policy of escalation in Viet-Nam. Mounting internal pressure to end the war and the transfer of the presidency in 1969 to Richard Nixon, who was re-elected in 1972, resulted in the Paris Agreement of 1973, which provided for the withdrawal of US troops from Viet-Nam.

Domestically, the main preoccupations of 1973 and early 1974 were a series of scandals and crises involving the presidency and senior administration officials on charges of corruption and obstruction of justice, which led to President Nixon's resignation in August 1974. Nixon was succeeded by his Vice-President, Gerald Ford.

In November 1976 Jimmy Carter was elected President and, although Democratic representation in both the Senate and House of Representatives increased, Carter, like his predecessor, found difficulty in passing important domestic legislation through Congress. During 1977 the Carter administration took the initiative on several foreign policy issues, including attempts to solve the impasse in the Middle East, which culminated in the signing in Washington of a peace treaty between Egypt and Israel in March 1979. A break with long-standing US foreign policy was made in December 1978 when formal links with Taiwan were terminated and diplomatic relations established with the People's Republic of China.

The state of the economy and the declining purchasing power of the dollar were the main domestic issues during 1978 and 1979. By April 1979 a shortage of crude oil imports caused by events in the Middle East had created a domestic energy crisis, which was not effectively countered by congressional or presidential measures, and Carter's political popularity slumped. Although his handling of the crises involving the detention by Iran of the US embassy staff in Teheran and Soviet intervention in Afghanistan retrieved some measure of popular support, Carter's management of the economy led to his defeat by the Republican candidate, Ronald Reagan, a former screen actor and state governor, in the 1980 presidential election. The Republicans also secured control of the Senate, although the House of Representatives retained a Democratic majority.

Reagan's broad appeal to populist and ultra-conservative sentiment was strengthened by his survival of an assassination attempt in March 1981. His administration has pursued a wide range of hard-line social and economic policies, notably that of 'New Federalism', under which the states are to assume responsibility for many federal social programmes. Successive federal budgets have also sought to reduce government commitments in these areas. Despite problems of severe economic recession and high unemployment, the Republicans retained their previous level of congressional representation in the November 1982 elections. With the resumption of economic growth in 1983, and its strong resurgence through 1984, unemployment and inflation fell, while stringent economic policies kept interest levels and the dollar exchange rate high. In November 1984 Reagan was re-elected for a further four-year term, defeating the Democratic candidate, former Vice-President Walter Mondale, by the largest majority of electoral votes in US history. The Republicans retained control of the Senate, with the House of Representatives remaining in the Democrats' hands.

In foreign affairs, the Government has taken a firmly anti-communist line, notably in its active support of right-wing regimes in Latin America, Africa and the Middle East, and in trade sanctions imposed against the USSR, following the political crisis in Poland. Despite continued indirect US support of the Taiwan regime, generally friendly relations have been maintained with the People's Republic of China. The change of leadership in the USSR in November 1982 was followed by a steady deterioration in US-Soviet relations. Negotiations held in Geneva between the USA and the USSR on the reduction of medium-range missiles were protracted and unsuccessful, and their termination by the USSR in November 1983 was followed by an escalation in European nuclear missile deployment by both sides. Relations were badly strained in September, following the destruction of a South Korean passenger aircraft overflying Soviet air space. The US military occupation of Grenada in November attracted considerable international criticism of Reagan's foreign policy, as did US peace-keeping operations in Lebanon, which, after incurring heavy casualties, were scaled down in February 1984 with the withdrawal of marine corps contingents from Beirut. The transfer of power in the USSR in the same month was followed later in 1984 by increased diplomatic contacts between the two countries on the topic of nuclear arms limitation. Formal negotiations, aimed at securing a reduction in nuclear weapon levels and a ban on the militarization of space, began in Geneva, Switzerland, in March, coinciding with a further change in the Soviet leadership.

Government

The USA is a federal republic. Each of the 50 constituent states and the District of Columbia exercises a measure of internal self-government. Defence, foreign affairs, coinage, posts, the higher levels of justice, and internal security are the responsibility of the federal government. The President is head of the executive and is elected for a four-year term by a college of representatives elected directly from each state. The President appoints the other members of the executive, subject to the consent of the Senate. The Congress is the seat of legislative power and consists of the Senate (100 members) and the House of Representatives (435 members). Two senators are chosen by direct election in each state, to serve a six-year term, and one-third of the membership is renewable every two years. Representatives are elected by direct and universal suffrage for a two-year term. Ultimate judicial power is vested in the Supreme Court, which has the power to veto legislation and to override executive actions which it regards as incompatible with the Constitution.

Defence

In July 1984 US armed forces totalled 2,135,900: army 780,800, air force 594,500, navy 564,800 and 196,600 marine corps. Military conscription ended in 1973. The Strategic Air Command and Polaris nuclear submarines are equipped with nuclear weapons. The defences of the USA are organized on a global basis. It is a member of the NATO and ANZUS Pact defensive organizations. Defence expenditure for 1983/84 totalled $227,403m. and proposed expenditure for 1984/85 was $266,151m.

Economic Affairs

The USA is the world's leading economic power. Its chief imports are petroleum, chemicals, metals and manufactures, machinery, vehicles and newsprint. In most other materials the country is self-supporting. This is reflected in the extreme diversification of the economy. Leading industries include steel, motor vehicles, aerospace industries, telecommunications, chemicals, electronics and all kinds of consumer goods. The chief agricultural products are cereals, cotton and tobacco. The principal mineral deposits are of petroleum, natural gas, coal, copper, iron, uranium and silver. US business corporations have built up substantial interests abroad.

Since the Second World War, the US economy has experienced many fluctuations, but with an underlying trend of steady expansion. The average annual increase in the country's GDP, measured in constant prices, was 4.4% between 1960 and 1970, slowing to 3.2% in 1970–79. The comparable growth rates for real GDP per head were 3.1% in 1960–70 and 2.3% in 1970–79. Between 1960 and 1979 the proportion of the working population who were engaged in agriculture, forestry and fishing declined from 7% to 2%, while the share taken by industrial workers fell from 36% to 32%. Meanwhile, employment in the service sector rose from 57% to 66% of the labour force. Over the same period, agriculture's share of GDP fell from 4% to 3% (despite a substantial increase in output), and industry's from 38% to 34%, while the contribution of services rose from 58% to 63%. According to estimates by the World Bank, the country's GNP per head (at average 1979–81 prices) was $11,590 in 1980, rising to $12,820 in 1981. This level of average output is among the highest in the world's industrialized countries, although (based on US dollar exchange rates) less than that of some European nations.

During 1974 and early 1975, in common with other industrialized countries, the USA suffered an economic recession. In 1976 the economy showed an overall improvement, and in early 1977 President Carter introduced a two-year programme to stimulate the economy and reduce unemployment. During the second half of the year, however, the dollar began to weaken against most major currencies, and in January 1978, partly owing to foreign pressure, the US monetary authorities intervened actively on foreign exchange markets to defend the dollar against speculation. Nevertheless, the dollar continued to fall, and by autumn was again at historic lows. Higher interest rates and successive measures to tighten credit, further reduce federal spending and promote voluntary wage and price guidelines, followed by an 'austerity' budget in January 1979, failed to retrieve dollar exchange rates. The imposition of stringent monetary controls, combined with a high level of interest rates, led to an improvement in the external value of the dollar by March 1980, although inflation, at 18.2%, had reached its highest level since 1946. By mid-1980 the economy had entered recession, with industrial activity declining sharply and inflation running at 12.4%. The imposition of stringent credit restrictions pushed interest rates to record levels.

President Reagan, whose 1980 campaign promises had included a balanced federal budget by 1983, substantially modified his views on deficit financing as his term of office proceeded: a revenue shortfall of $110,600m. in 1981/82 was followed by a deficit of $195,400m. in 1982/83, during which period defence spending was substantially increased at the expense of federal welfare programmes. The deficit for 1983/84 totalled $175,300m. Although initial projections put the 1984/85 deficit at $166,900m., it was expected that the eventual shortfall would reach $210,000m.

The record deficits of the Reagan administration, and whether taxation should be increased to reduce them, were the dominant issue of the 1984 presidential election campaign. Although the bulk of the 1984/85 deficit was attributable to the gap between increased federal spending and the revenue shortfall created by tax reductions implemented in 1981, Reagan ruled out tax increases during a second term in office, stating that the deficit could be reduced by cost savings, which would include an $8,700m. reduction in military spending in 1985/86 as well as further scaling-down of social welfare programmes. Total savings of between $35,000m. and $50,000m. were envisaged, together with a 'simplification' of the federal tax system. In early 1985 there were signs of strong congressional resistance to the severity of the President's proposed spending cuts.

After moving further into recession in 1982, when December unemployment reached a 42-year high of 10.7%, there was a strong recovery in the domestic economy during 1983. The unemployment rate was reduced to 8.2%, while the rate of inflation, which had been held in check by the economic downturn to 3.9% in 1982 after reaching 8.9% in 1981, ended 1983 at 3.8%. The inflation rate was reduced to 3.7% in 1984. GNP expanded by about 6.5% in 1983, after falling by 1.8% in the previous year, and grew by 6.8% in 1984, the highest rate of increase for 33 years. The continuing economic recovery, which has encompassed both business investment and private consumer spending, has also reduced levels of unemployment to less than 7%.

While a high level of interest rates has effectively protected the dollar exchange rate since 1982, the dollar, which by early 1985 had surged to record highs against most Western European currencies, has become overvalued in international trading terms. This factor has reduced US export competitiveness and stimulated high levels of imports, which led in 1984 to a record trade deficit of $123,300m. compared with a shortfall of $69,400m. in 1983.

Transport and Communications

There is a comprehensive network of railways operated by private companies; the network retains its lead as a freight transporter but long-distance passenger services have been virtually eliminated by competition from airlines. In 1980 there were 6,365,590 km (3,955,387 miles) of roads, including 69,202 km (43,000 miles) of motorway. Water transport is used on the Mississippi and other rivers and on the Great Lakes. Major seaports include New York, New Orleans, Houston, Baltimore and Tampa, and on the west coast Long Beach, Los Angeles, Portland, and Seattle. Chicago, Duluth-Superior and Toledo are the principal Great Lakes ports. Internal air services are extensively used and frequent international services are provided by many domestic and foreign airlines.

Social Welfare

Provision of welfare and medical services is being progressively standardized and extended by federal legislation: formerly benefits varied considerably between states. By 1975 provision by employers of health insurance for employees had become mandatory. Since early 1982 the Reagan administration has carried out many wide-ranging cuts in federal welfare programmes. Despite opposition from the medical profession to 'socialized medicine' there is now available a far more comprehensive scheme of publicly funded medical care. In 1981 the USA had 485,123 physicians (one for every 474 inhabitants). In 1982 there were 6,221 hospitals, with 779,647 beds (one for every 298 people).

Education

Education is primarily the concern of state and local governments, but some federal funds are available to help meet special needs of primary, secondary and higher education. The Department of Education sponsors six financial aid programmes for post-secondary students. Most states have kindergartens, elementary, junior high and high schools. Education is free except in private schools. The period of compulsory education varies among states. In 1982 there were 30.8m. pupils enrolled in primary schools and 13.5m. in secondary schools. There were more than 3,200 universities and colleges and about 12.4m. students receiving higher education. Total expenditure on education in 1983/84 was estimated at $230,000m.

Tourism

The USA affords every kind of interest to tourists from winter sports to tropical beaches. The natural marvels include the Grand Canyon, the Everglades and the large national parks of the far west. Other attractions include modern architecture, museums and art galleries and night life in the big cities. Receipts from tourism in 1983 totalled $11,408m.

Space Research

The first space vehicle successfully launched by the USA was Explorer 1, an earth-orbiting satellite launched in January 1958. The first manned earth-orbiting flight by the USA took place in 1962. In 1964 Ranger 7 relayed pictures of the moon back to earth. Photographic relays from the moon were continued and in 1967 two Surveyor spacecraft carried out analyses of lunar soil. The Apollo series of flights culminated in a manned landing on the moon in July 1969. Four more successful manned landings followed; one failed, and no manned moon landings have been made since 1972. In November 1971 the unmanned Mariner 9 orbited Mars. In March 1972 Pioneer 10 was launched to travel beyond Jupiter, and in April 1972 Apollo 16 made a successful moon landing. In August the last orbiting astronomical observatory was launched and in May 1973 Skylab was put into orbit.

In July 1975 a joint venture with the USSR's Soyuz programme culminated in Soviet and US spacecraft docking in space. The Viking mission landed equipment in 1976 for detecting the existence of life in any form on Mars. In 1977 Voyagers 1 and 2 were launched to travel first to Jupiter and then to Saturn and Uranus. In February 1979 Pioneer Venus transmitted information on atmospheric and surface conditions on Venus and in March photographs of Jupiter were transmitted by Voyager 1. Important photographs of Jupiter and its moons were transmitted by Voyager 2 in July 1979. Data on Saturn was received from a Pioneer spacecraft in September and in November 1980 Voyager 1 transmitted photographs of satellites of Saturn. Photographs of the surface of Saturn were received from Voyager 2 in August 1981. This spacecraft is due to approach Uranus in 1986, and, if still operational, could transmit observations of Neptune in 1989.

In 1978 a new phase of the space programme began with the testing of the space shuttle, a reusable manned vehicle capable of carrying satellite and communications equipment. The initial launching of the vehicle Columbia was completed in April 1981, and its first operational flight took place in November 1982, and a second vehicle, Challenger, has been operational since April 1983. A third vehicle of this class, Discovery, was launched in August 1984.

In July 1983 plans were disclosed for the USA's next major space project, an orbiting space station, on which work would begin in 1986 for launching by 1992. In January 1984 it was announced that a permanently-manned space station would be developed by the early 1990s.

Public Holidays

1985: 27 May (Memorial Day), 4 July (Independence Day), 2 September (Labor Day), 28 November (Thanksgiving Day), 25 December (Christmas Day).
1986: 1 January (New Year's Day), 17 February (for George Washington's Birthday), 28 March (Good Friday).

Weights and Measures

With certain exceptions, the imperial system is in force. One US billion equals 1,000 million; one US cwt equals 100 lb; long ton equals 2,240 lb; short ton equals 2,000 lb. A policy of gradual voluntary conversion to the metric system is being encouraged by the federal government.

Currency and Exchange Rates

100 cents = 1 United States dollar ($).

Exchange rates (31 December 1984):
£1 sterling = US $1.159;
US $1 = 86.28 pence.

The Constitution

Adopted 4 March 1789.

PREAMBLE

We, the people of the United States, in order to form a more perfect Union, establish justice, insure domestic tranquillity, provide for the common defence, promote the general welfare, and secure the blessings of liberty to ourselves and our posterity, do ordain and establish this Constitution for the United States of America.

ARTICLE I

Section 1

All legislative powers herein granted shall be vested in a Congress of the United States, which shall consist of a Senate and House of Representatives.

Section 2

1. The House of Representatives shall be composed of members chosen every second year by the people of the several States and the electors in each State shall have the qualifications requisite for electors of the most numerous branch of the State Legislature.

2. No person shall be a Representative who shall not have attained to the age of 25 years and been seven years a citizen of the United States and who shall not, when elected, be an inhabitant of that State in which he shall be chosen.

3. Representatives and direct taxes shall be apportioned among the several States which may be included within this Union according to their respective numbers, which shall be determined by adding to the whole number of free persons, including those bound to service for a term of years, and excluding Indians not taxed, three-fifths of all other persons. The actual enumeration shall be made within three years after the first meeting of the Congress of the United States, and within every subsequent term of 10 years, in such manner as they shall by law direct. The number of Representatives shall not exceed one for every 30,000, but each State shall have at least one Representative; and until such enumeration shall be made, the State of New Hampshire shall be entitled to choose 3; Massachusetts 8; Rhode Island and Providence Plantations 1; Connecticut 5; New York 6; New Jersey 4; Pennsylvania 8; Delaware 1; Maryland 6; Virginia 10; North Carolina 5; South Carolina 5; and Georgia 3.*

4. When vacancies happen in the representation from any State, the Executive Authority thereof shall issue writs of election to fill such vacancies.

5. The House of Representatives shall choose their Speaker and other officers and shall have the sole power of impeachment.

Section 3

1. The Senate of the United States shall be composed of two Senators from each State, chosen by the Legislature thereof, for six years; and each Senator shall have one vote.

2. Immediately after they shall be assembled in consequence of the first election, they shall be divided as equally as may be into three classes. The seats of the Senators of the first class shall be vacated at the expiration of the second year, of the second class at the expiration of the fourth year, and of the third class at the expiration of the sixth year, so that one-third may be chosen every second year, and if vacancies happen by resignation or otherwise, during the recess of the Legislature or of any State, the Executive therefore may make temporary appointment until the next meeting of the Legislature, which shall then fill such vacancies.

3. No person shall be a Senator who shall not have attained to the age of 30 years, and been nine years a citizen of the United States, and who shall not, when elected, be an inhabitant of that State for which he shall be chosen.

4. The Vice-President of the United States shall be President of the Senate, but shall have no vote unless they be equally divided.

5. The Senate shall choose their other officers, and also a President pro tempore, in the absence of the Vice-President, or when he shall exercise the office of the President of the United States.

6. The Senate shall have the sole power to try all impeachments. When sitting for that purpose, they shall be on oath or affirmation. When the President of the United States is tried, the Chief Justice shall preside; and no person shall be convicted without the concurrence of two-thirds of the members present.

7. Judgment of case of impeachment shall not extend further than to removal from office, and disqualification to hold and enjoy any office of honour, trust, or profit under the United States; but the party convicted shall nevertheless be liable and subject to indictment, trial, judgment, and punishment, according to law.

Section 4

1. The times, places and manner of holding elections for Senators and Representatives shall be prescribed in each State by the Legislature thereof; but the Congress may at any time by law make or alter such regulations, except as to places of choosing Senators.

2. The Congress shall assemble at least once in every year, and such meeting shall be on the first Monday in December, unless they shall by law appoint a different day.

Section 5

1. Each House shall be the judge of the elections, returns, and qualifications of its own members, and a majority of each shall constitute a quorum to do business; but a smaller number may adjourn from day to day, and may be authorized to compel the attendance of absent members in such manner and under such penalties as each House may provide.

2. Each House may determine the rules of its proceedings, punish its members for disorderly behaviour, and with the concurrence of two-thirds, expel a member.

3. Each House shall keep a journal of its proceedings, and from time to time publish the same, excepting such parts as may in their judgment require secrecy; and the yeas and nays of the members of either House on any question shall, at the desire of one-fifth of those present, be entered on the journal.

4. Neither House, during the session of Congress shall, without the consent of the other, adjourn for more than three days, nor to any other place than that in which the two Houses shall be sitting.

* See Article XIV, Amendments.

Section 6

1. The Senators and Representatives shall receive a compensation for their services to be ascertained by law, and paid out of the Treasury of the United States. They shall in all cases, except treason, felony, and breach of the peace, be privileged from arrest during their attendance at the session of their respective Houses, and in going to and returning from the same; and for any speech or debate in either House they shall not be questioned in any other place.

2. No Senator or Representative shall, during the time for which he was elected, be appointed to any civil office under the authority of the United States which shall have been created, or the emoluments whereof shall have been increased during such time; and no person holding any office under the United States shall be a member of either House during his continuance in office.

Section 7

1. All bills for raising revenue shall originate in the House of Representatives, but the Senate may propose or concur with amendments, as on other bills.

2. Every bill which shall have passed the House of Representatives and the Senate shall, before it becomes a law, be presented to the President of the United States; if he approve, he shall sign it, but if not he shall return it, with his objections to that House in which it shall have originated, who shall enter the objections at large on their journal and proceed to reconsider it. If after such reconsideration two-thirds of that House shall agree to pass the bill, it shall be sent, together with the objections, to the other House, by which it shall likewise be reconsidered; and if approved by two-thirds of that House it shall become a law. But in such cases the votes of both Houses shall be determined by yeas and nays, and the names of the persons voting for and against the bill be entered on the journal of each House respectively. If any bill shall not be returned by the President within 10 days (Sundays excepted) after it shall have been presented to him the same shall be a law in like manner as if he had signed it, unless the Congress by their adjournment prevent its return; in which case it shall not be a law.

3. Every order, resolution, or vote to which the concurrence of the Senate and House of Representatives may be necessary (except on a question of adjournment) shall be presented to the President of the United States, and before the same shall take effect shall be approved by him, or being disapproved by him shall be repassed by two-thirds of the Senate and the House of Representatives, according to the rules and limitations prescribed in the case of a bill.

Section 8

1. The Congress shall have power:

To lay and collect taxes, duties, imposts, and excises, to pay the debts and provide for the common defence and general welfare of the United States; but all duties, imposts, and excises shall be uniform throughout the United States.

2. To borrow money on the credit of the United States.

3. To regulate commerce with foreign nations; and among the several States and with the Indian tribes.

4. To establish a uniform rule of naturalization and uniform laws on the subject of bankruptcies throughout the United States.

5. To coin money, regulate the value thereof, and of foreign coin, and fix the standard of weights and measures.

6. To provide for the punishment of counterfeiting the securities and current coin of the United States.

7. To establish post-offices and post-roads.

8. To promote the progress of science and useful arts by securing for limited times to authors and inventors the exclusive rights to their respective writings and discoveries.

9. To constitute tribunals inferior to the Supreme Court.

10. To define and punish piracies and felonies committed on the high seas, and offences against the law of nations.

11. To declare war, grant letters of marque and reprisal, and make rules concerning captures on land and water.

12. To raise and support armies, but no appropriation of money to that use shall be for a longer term than two years.

13. To provide and maintain a navy.

14. To make rules for the government and regulation of the land and naval forces.

15. To provide for calling forth the militia to execute the laws of the Union, suppress insurrections, and repel invasions.

16. To provide for organizing, arming and disciplining the militia, and for governing such part of them as may be employed in the service of the United States, reserving to the States respectively the appointment of the officers, and the authority of training the militia according to the discipline prescribed by Congress.

17. To exercise exclusive legislation in all cases whatsoever over such district (not exceeding 10 miles square) as may, by cession of particular States and the acceptance of Congress, become the seat of Government of the United States and to exercise like authority over all places purchased by the consent of the Legislature of the State in which the same shall be, for the erection of forts, magazines, arsenals, dry-docks, and other needful buildings.

18. To make all laws which shall be necessary and proper for carrying into execution the foregoing powers and all other powers vested by this Constitution in the Government of the United States, or in any department or officer thereof.

Section 9

1. The migration or importation of such persons as any of the States now existing shall think proper to admit shall not be prohibited by the Congress prior to the year 1808, but a tax or duty may be imposed on such importations, not exceeding 10 dollars for each person.

2. The privilege of the writ of habeas corpus shall not be suspended, unless when in cases of rebellion or invasion the public safety may require it.

3. No bill or attainder or ex post facto law shall be passed.

4. No capitation or other direct tax shall be laid, unless in proportion to the census or enumeration hereinbefore directed to be taken.

5. No tax or duty shall be laid on articles exported from any State.

6. No preference shall be given by any regulation of commerce or revenue to the ports of one State over those of another, nor shall vessels bound to or from one State be obliged to enter, clear, or pay duties to another.

7. No money shall be drawn from the Treasury but in consequence of appropriations made by law; and a regular statement and account of the receipts and expenditures of all public money shall be published from time to time.

8. No title of nobility shall be granted by the United States. And no person holding any office of profit or trust under them shall, without the consent of the Congress, accept of any present, emolument, office, or title of any kind whatever from any king, prince, or foreign state.

Section 10

1. No State shall enter into any treaty, alliance or confederation, grant letters of marque and reprisal, coin money, emit bills of credit, make anything but gold and silver coin a tender in payment of debts, pass any bill of attainder, ex post facto law, or law impairing the obligation of contracts, or grant any title of nobility.

2. No State shall, without the consent of the Congress, lay any impost or duties on imports or exports, except what may be absolutely necessary for executing its inspection laws, and the net produce of all duties and imposts, laid by any State on imports or exports, shall be for the use of the Treasury of the United States; and all such laws shall be subject to the revision and control of the Congress.

3. No State shall, without the consent of Congress, lay any duty of tonnage, keep troops or ships of war in time of peace, enter into agreement or compact with another State, or with a foreign power, or engage in war, unless actually invaded, or in such imminent danger as will not admit of delay.

ARTICLE II

Section 1

1. The Executive power shall be vested in a President of the United States of America. He shall hold his office during the term of four years, and, together with the Vice-President chosen for the same term, be elected as follows:

2. Each State shall appoint, in such manner as the Legislature thereof may direct, a number of electors equal to the whole number of Senators and Representatives to which the State may be entitled in the Congress; but no Senator or Representative or person holding an office of trust or profit under the United States shall be appointed an elector.

3. The electors shall meet in their respective States and vote by ballot for two persons, of whom one at least shall not be an inhabitant of the same State with themselves. And they shall make a list of all the persons voted for, and of the number of votes for each, which list they shall sign and certify and transmit, sealed, to the seat of the Government of the United States, directed to the President of the Senate. The President of the Senate shall, in the presence of the Senate and House of Representatives, open all the certificates, and the votes shall then be counted. The person having the greatest number of votes shall be the President, if such number be a majority of the whole number of electors appointed, and if there be more than one who have such a majority, and have an equal number of votes, then the House of Representatives shall immediately choose by ballot one of them for President; and if no person have a majority, then from the five highest on the list the said House shall in like manner choose the President. But in choosing the President, the vote shall be taken by States, the representation from each State having one vote. A quorum, for this purpose, shall consist of a member or members from two-thirds of the States, and a majority of all the States shall be necessary to a choice. In every case, after the choice of the President, the person having the greatest number of votes of the electors shall be the Vice-President. But if there should remain two or more who have equal votes, the Senate shall choose from them by ballot the Vice-President.*

4. The Congress may determine the time of choosing the electors and the day on which they shall give their votes, which day shall be the same throughout the United States.

5. No person except a natural born citizen, or a citizen of the United States, at the time of the adoption of the Constitution, shall be eligible to the office of President; neither shall any person be eligible to that office who shall not have attained to the age of 35 years and been 14 years a resident within the United States.

6. In case of the removal of the President from office, or of his death, resignation, or inability to discharge the powers and duties of the said office, the same shall devolve on the Vice-President, and the Congress may by law provide for the case of removal, death, resignation, or inability, both of the President and Vice-President, declaring what officer shall then act as President, and such officer shall act accordingly until the disability be removed or a President shall be elected.†

7. The President shall, at stated times, receive for his services a compensation which shall neither be increased nor diminished during the period for which he shall have been elected, and he shall not receive within that period any other emolument from the United States, or any of them.

8. Before he enter on the execution of his office he shall take the following oath or affirmation:

'I do solemnly swear (or affirm) that I will faithfully execute the office of President of the United States, and will, to the best of my ability, preserve, protect, and defend the Constitution of the United States.'

Section 2

1. The President shall be Commander-in-Chief of the Army and Navy of the United States, and of the militia of the several States when called into the actual service of the United States; he may require the opinion, in writing, of the principal officer in each of the executive departments upon any subject relating to the duties of their respective offices, and he shall have the power to grant reprieves and pardons for offences against the United States except in cases of impeachment.

2. He shall have power by and with the advice and consent of the Senate to make treaties, provided two-thirds of the Senators present concur; and he shall nominate and by and with the advice and consent of the Senate shall appoint ambassadors, other public ministers and consuls, judges of the Supreme Court, and all other officers of the United States whose appointments are not herein otherwise provided for, and which shall be established by law; but the Congress may by law vest the appointment of such inferior officers as they think proper in the President alone, in the courts of law, or in the heads of departments.

3. The President shall have power to fill up all vacancies that may happen during the recess of the Senate by granting commissions, which shall expire at the end of their next session.

Section 3

He shall from time to time give to the Congress information of the state of the Union, and recommend to their consideration such measures as he shall judge necessary and expedient; he may, on extraordinary occasions, convene both Houses, or either of them, and in case of disagreement between them with respect to the time of adjournment, he may adjourn them to such time as he shall think proper; he shall receive ambassadors and other public ministers; he shall take care that the laws be faithfully executed, and shall commission all the officers of the United States.

Section 4

The President, Vice-President, and all civil officers of the United States shall be removed from office on impeachment for conviction of treason, bribery or other high crimes and misdemeanours.

ARTICLE III

Section 1

The judicial power of the United States shall be vested in one Supreme Court, and in such inferior courts as the Congress may from time to time ordain and establish. The judges, both of the Supreme and inferior courts, shall hold their offices during good behaviour, and shall at stated times receive for their services a compensation which shall not be diminished during their continuance in office.

Section 2

1. The judicial power shall extend to all cases in law and equity arising under this Constitution, the laws of the United States, and treaties made, or which shall be made, under their authority; to all cases affecting ambassadors, other public ministers and consuls; to all cases of admiralty and maritime jurisdiction; to controversies to which the United States shall be a party; to controversies between two or more States, between a State and citizens of another State, between citizens of different States, between citizens of the same State claiming lands under grants of different States, and between a State, or the citizens thereof, and foreign States, citizens, or subjects.

2. In all cases affecting ambassadors, other public ministers, and consuls, and those in which a State shall be party, the Supreme Court shall have original jurisdiction. In all the other cases before mentioned the Supreme Court shall have appellate jurisdiction both as to law and fact, with such exceptions and under such regulations as the Congress shall make.

3. The trial of all crimes, except in cases of impeachment, shall be by jury, and such trials shall be held in the State where the said crimes shall have been committed; but when not committed within any State the trial shall be at such place or places as the Congress may by law have directed.

Section 3

1. Treason against the United States shall consist only in levying war against them, or in adhering to their enemies, giving them aid and comfort. No person shall be convicted of treason unless on the testimony of two witnesses to the same overt act, or on confession in open court.

2. The Congress shall have power to declare the punishment of treason, but no attainder of treason shall work corruption of blood of forfeiture except during the life of the person attained.

ARTICLE IV

Section 1

Full faith and credit shall be given in each State to the public acts, records, and judicial proceedings of every other State. And the Congress may by general laws prescribe the manner in which such acts, records, and proceedings shall be proved, and the effect thereof.

Section 2

1. The citizens of each State shall be entitled to all privileges and immunities of citizens in the several States.

2. A person charged in any State with treason, felony, or other crime, who shall flee from justice, and be found in another State, shall, on demand of the Executive authority of the State from which he fled, be delivered up, to be removed to the State having jurisdiction of the crime.

3. No person held to service or labour in one State, under the laws thereof, escaping into another shall in consequence of any law or regulation therein, be discharged from such service or labour, but shall be delivered up on claim of the party to whom such service or labour may be due.

Section 3

1. New States may be admitted by the Congress into this Union; but no new State shall be formed or erected within the jurisdiction of any other State, nor any State be formed by the junction of two or more States, or parts of States, without the consent of the Legislatures of the States concerned, as well as of the Congress.

2. The Congress shall have the power to dispose of and make all needful rules and regulations respecting the territory or other property belonging to the United States; and nothing in this Constitution shall be so construed as to prejudice any claims of the United States, or of any particular State.

Section 4

The United States shall guarantee to every State in this Union a Republican form of government, and shall protect each of them against invasion, and on application of the Legislature, or of the Executive (when the Legislature cannot be convened) against domestic violence.

ARTICLE V

The Congress, whenever two-thirds of both Houses shall deem it necessary, shall propose amendments to this Constitution, or, on the application of the Legislature of two-thirds of the several States, shall call a convention for proposing amendments, which in either case, shall be valid to all intents and purposes, as part of this Constitution, when ratified by the Legislature of three-fourths of the several States, or by conventions in three-fourths thereof, as the one or the other mode of ratification may be proposed by the Congress, provided that no amendment which may be made prior to the year 1808 shall in any manner affect the first and fourth clauses in the Ninth Section of the First Article; and that no State, without its consent, shall be deprived of its equal suffrage in the Senate.

ARTICLE VI

1. All debts contracted and engagements entered into before the adoption of this Constitution shall be as valid against the United States under this Constitution as under the Confederation.

2. This Constitution and the laws of the United States which shall be made in pursuance thereof and all treaties made, or which shall be made, under the authority of the United States, shall be the supreme law of the land, and the judges in every State shall be bound thereby, anything in the Constitution or laws of any State to the contrary notwithstanding.

3. The Senators and Representatives before mentioned, and the members of the several State Legislatures, and all executives and judicial officers, both of the United States and of the several States, shall be bound by oath or affirmation to support this Constitution; but no religious test shall ever be required as a qualification to any office or public trust under the United States.

ARTICLE VII

The ratification of the Conventions of nine States shall be sufficient for the establishment of this Constitution between the States so ratifying the same.

Amendments to the Constitution

Ten Original Amendments, in force 15 December 1791:

ARTICLE I

Congress shall make no law respecting an establishment of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof; or abridging the freedom of speech or of the Press; or the right of the people peaceably to assemble and to petition the Government for a redress of grievances.

ARTICLE II

A well-regulated militia being necessary to the security of a free State, the right of the people to keep and bear arms shall not be infringed.

ARTICLE III

No soldier shall, in time of peace, be quartered in any house without the consent of the owner, nor in time of war but in a manner to be prescribed by law.

ARTICLE IV

The right of the people to be secure in their persons, houses, papers, and effects, against unreasonable searches and seizures, shall not be violated, and no warrants shall issue but upon probable cause, supported by oath or affirmation, and particularly describing the place to be searched, and the persons or things to be seized.

ARTICLE V

No person shall be held to answer for a capital or other infamous crime unless on a presentment or indictment of a Grand Jury, except in cases arising in the land or naval forces, or in the militia, when in actual service, in time of war or public danger; nor shall any person be subject for the same offense to be twice put in jeopardy of life or limb; nor shall be compelled in any criminal case to be a witness against himself, nor be deprived of life, liberty, or property, without due process of law; nor shall private property be taken for public use without just compensation.

ARTICLE VI

In all criminal prosecutions, the accused shall enjoy the right to a speedy and public trial, by an impartial jury of the State and district wherein the crime shall have been committed, which districts shall have been previously ascertained by law, and to be informed of the nature and cause of the accusation; to be confronted with the witnesses against him; to have compulsory process for obtaining witnesses in his favour, and to have the assistance of counsel for his defense.

ARTICLE VII

In suits at common law, where the value in controversy shall exceed 20 dollars, the right of trial by jury shall be preserved, and no fact tried by a jury shall be otherwise re-examined in any court of the United States than according to the rules of the common law.

ARTICLE VIII

Excessive bail shall not be required, nor excessive fines imposed, nor cruel and unusual punishments inflicted.

ARTICLE IX

The enumeration in the Constitution of certain rights shall not be construed to deny or disparage others retained by the people.

ARTICLE X

The powers not delegated to the United States by the Constitution, nor prohibited by it to the States, are reserved to the States respectively, or to the people.

Subsequent Amendments:

ARTICLE XI

(became part of the Constitution February 1795)

The judicial power of the United States shall not be construed to extend to any suit in law or equity, commenced or prosecuted against one of the United States, by citizens of another State, or by citizens or subjects of any foreign State.

ARTICLE XII

(ratified June 1804)

The Electors shall meet in their respective States, and vote by ballot for President and Vice-President, one of whom at least shall not be an inhabitant of the same State with themselves; they shall name in their ballots the person voted for as President, and in distinct ballots the person voted for as Vice-President; and they shall make distinct list of all persons voted for as President, and of all persons voted for as Vice-President, and of the number of votes for each, which list they shall sign and certify, and transmit, sealed, to the seat of the Government of the United States, directed to the President of the Senate; the President of the Senate shall, in the presence of the Senate and House of Representatives, open all the certificates and the votes shall then be counted; the person having the greatest number of votes for President shall be the President, if such number be a majority of the whole number of Electors appointed; and if no person have such majority, then from the persons having the highest number, not exceeding three, on the list of those voted for as President, the House of Representatives shall choose immediately, by ballot, the President. But in choosing the President, the votes shall be taken by States, the representation from each State having one vote; a quorum for this purpose shall consist of a member or members from two-thirds of the States, and a majority of all the States shall be necessary to a choice. And if the House of Representatives shall not choose a President, whenever the right of choice shall devolve upon them, before the fourth day of March next following, then the Vice-President shall act as President, as in the case of the death or other constitutional disability of the President. The person having the greatest number of votes as Vice-President shall be the Vice-President if such number be a majority of the whole number of Electors appointed, and if no person have a majority, then, from the two highest numbers on the list the Senate shall choose the Vice-President; a quorum for the purpose shall consist of two-thirds of the whole number of Senators, and a majority of the whole number shall be necessary to a choice. But no person constitutionally ineligible to the office of President shall be eligible to that of Vice-President of the United States.

ARTICLE XIII
(ratified December 1865)

1. Neither slavery nor involuntary servitude, except as a punishment for crime whereof the party shall have been duly convicted, shall exist within the United States, or any place subject to their jurisdiction.

2. Congress shall have the power to enforce this article by appropriate legislation.

ARTICLE XIV
(ratified July 1868)

1. All persons born or naturalized in the United States, and subject to the jurisdiction thereof, are citizens of the United States and of the State wherein they reside. No State shall make or enforce any law which shall abridge the privileges or immunities of citizens of the United States, nor shall any State deprive any person of life, liberty, or property without due process of law, nor deny to any person within its jurisdiction the equal protection of the laws.

2. Representatives shall be apportioned among the several States according to their respective numbers, counting the whole number of persons in each State excluding Indians not taxed. But when the right to vote at any election for the choice of Electors for President and Vice-President of the United States, Representatives in Congress, the executive and judicial officers of a State, or the members of the Legislature thereof, is denied to any of the male inhabitants of such State, being 21 years of age, and citizens of the United States, or in any way abridged, except for participation in rebellion, or other crime, the basis of representation therein shall be reduced in the proportion which the number of such male citizens shall bear to the whole number of male citizens 21 years of age in such State.

3. No person shall be a Senator or Representative in Congress, or Elector of President and Vice-President or hold any office, civil or military, under the United States, or under any State, who, having previously taken an oath as member of Congress or as an officer of the United States, or as a member of any State Legislature, or as an executive or judicial officer of any State, to support the Constitution of the United States, shall have engaged in insurrection or rebellion against the same, or given aid and comfort to the enemies thereof. But Congress may, by vote of two-thirds of each House, remove such disability.

4. The validity of the public debt of the United States, authorized by law, including debts incurred for payment of pensions and bounties for services in suppressing insurrection and rebellion, shall not be questioned. But neither the United States nor any State shall assume or pay any debt or obligation incurred in aid of insurrection or rebellion against the United States, or any claim for the loss or emancipation of any slave; but all such debts, obligations, and claims shall be held illegal and void.

5. The Congress shall have power to enforce by appropriate legislation the provisions of this article.

ARTICLE XV
(ratified March 1870)

1. The right of the citizens of the United States to vote shall not be denied or abridged by the United States or by any State on account of race, colour, or previous condition of servitude.

2. The Congress shall have power to enforce the provisions of this article by appropriate legislation.

ARTICLE XVI
(ratified February 1913)

The Congress shall have power to lay and collect taxes on incomes, from whatever sources derived, without apportionment among the several States, and without regard to any census or enumeration.

ARTICLE XVII
(ratified May 1913)

1. The Senate of the United States shall be composed of two Senators from each State, elected by the people thereof, for six years; and each Senator shall have one vote. The electors in each State shall have the qualifications requisite for electors of the most numerous branch of the State Legislature.

2. When vacancies happen in the representation of any State in the Senate, the executive authority of such State shall issue writs of election to fill such vacancies: Provided that the Legislature of any State may empower the Executive thereof to make temporary appointment until the people fill the vacancies by election as the Legislature may direct.

3. This amendment shall not be so construed as to affect the election or term of any Senator chosen before it becomes valid as part of the Constitution.

ARTICLE XVIII
(ratified January 1919*)

1. After one year from the ratification of this article the manufacture, sale, or transportation of intoxicating liquors within, the importation thereof into, or the exportation thereof from the United States, and all territory subject to the jurisdiction thereof for beverage purposes is hereby prohibited.

2. The Congress and the several States shall have concurrent power to enforce this article by appropriate legislation.

3. This article shall be inoperative unless it shall have been ratified as an amendment to the Constitution by the Legislatures of the several States, as provided in the Constitution, within seven years from the date of the submission hereof to the States by the Congress.

ARTICLE XIX
(ratified August 1920)

1. The right of citizens of the United States to vote shall not be denied or abridged by the United States or by any State on account of sex.

2. Congress shall have power, by appropriate legislation to enforce the provisions of this article.

ARTICLE XX
(ratified January 1933)

Section 1

The terms of the President and Vice-President shall end at noon on the 30th day of January, and the terms of Senators and Representatives at noon on the third day of January, of the years in which such terms would have ended if this article had not been ratified; and the terms of their successors shall then begin.

Section 2

The Congress shall assemble at least once in every year, and such meetings shall begin at noon on the third day of January, unless they shall by law appoint a different day.

Section 3

If, at the time fixed for the beginning of the term of the President, the President elect shall have died, the Vice-President elect shall become President. If a President shall not have been chosen before the time fixed for the begining of his term, or if the President elect shall have failed to qualify, then the Vice-President elect shall act as President until a President shall have qualified; and the Congress may by law provide for the case wherein neither a President elect nor a Vice-President elect shall have qualified, declaring who shall then act as President, or the manner in which one who is to act shall be selected, and such person shall act accordingly until a President or Vice-President shall have qualified.

Section 4

The Congress may by law provide for the case of the death of any of the persons from whom the House of Representatives may choose a President whenever the right of choice shall have devolved upon them, and for the case of the death of any of the persons from whom the Senate may choose a Vice-President whenever the right of choice shall have devolved upon them.

Section 5

Sections 1 and 2 shall take effect on the 15th day of October following the ratification of this article.

Section 6

This article shall be inoperative unless it shall have been ratified as an amendment to the Constitution by the legislature of three-fourths of the several States within seven years from the date of its submission.

---

* Repealed by Article XXI.

ARTICLE XXI
(ratified December 1933)

Section 1

The 18th article of amendment to the Constitution of the United States is hereby repealed.

Section 2

The transportation or importation into any State, Territory or Possession of the United States for delivery or use therein of intoxicating liquors, in violation of the laws thereof, is hereby prohibited.

Section 3

This article shall be inoperative unless it shall have been ratified as an amendment to the Constitution by conventions in the several States, as provided in the Constitution, within seven years from the date of the submission hereof to the States by the Congress.

ARTICLE XXII
(ratified February 1951)

No person shall be elected to the office of President more than twice, and no person who has held the office of President, or acted as President, for more than two years of a term to which some other person was elected President shall be elected to the office of President more than once. But this article shall not apply to any person holding the office of President when this Article was proposed by Congress, and shall not prevent any person who may be holding the office of President, or acting as President, during the term within which this Article becomes operative from holding the office of President or acting as President during the remainder of such term.

ARTICLE XXIII
(ratified March 1961)

Section 1

The District constituting the seat of Government of the United States shall appoint in such manner as the Congress may direct:

A number of electors of President and Vice-President equal to the whole number of Senators and Representatives in Congress to which the District would be entitled if it were a State, but in no event more than the least populous State; they shall be in addition to those appointed by the States, but they shall be considered, for the purposes of the election of President and Vice-President, to be electors appointed by a State; and they shall meet in the District and perform such duties as provided by the 12th article of amendment.

Section 2

The Congress shall have power to enforce this article by appropriate legislation.

ARTICLE XXIV
(ratified January 1964)

Section 1

The right of citizens of the United States to vote in any primary or other election for President or Vice-President, for electors for President or Vice-President, or for Senator or Representative in Congress, shall not be denied or abridged by the United States or any State by reason of failure to pay any poll tax or other tax.

Section 2

The Congress shall have power to enforce this article by appropriate legislation.

ARTICLE XXV
(ratified February 1967)

Section 1

In the case of the removal of the President from office or of his death or resignation, the Vice-President shall become President.

Section 2

Whenever there is a vacancy in the office of the Vice-President, the President shall nominate a Vice-President who shall take office upon confirmation by a majority vote of both Houses of Congress.

Section 3

Whenever the President transmits to the President pro tempore of the Senate and the Speaker of the House of Representatives his written declaration that he is unable to discharge the powers and duties of his office, and until he transmits to them a written declaration to the contrary, such powers and duties shall be discharged by the Vice-President as Acting President.

Section 4

Whenever the Vice-President and a majority of either the principal officers of the executive departments or of such other body as Congress may by law provide, transmit to the President pro tempore of the Senate and the Speaker of the House of Representatives their written declaration that the President is unable to discharge the powers and duties of his office, the Vice-President shall immediately assume the powers and duties of the office as Acting President.

Thereafter, when the President transmits to the President pro tempore of the Senate and the Speaker of the House of Representatives his written declaration that no inability exists, he shall resume the powers and duties of his office unless the Vice-President and a majority of either the principal officers of the executive department or of such other body as Congress may by law provide, transmit within four days to the President pro tempore of the Senate and the Speaker of the House of Representatives their written declaration that the President is unable to discharge the powers and duties of his office. Thereupon Congress shall decide the issue, assembling within 48 hours for that purpose if not in session. If the Congress, within 21 days after receipt of the latter written declaration, or, if Congress is not in session, within 21 days after Congress is required to assemble, determines by two-thirds vote of both Houses that the President is unable to discharge the powers and duties of his office, the Vice-President shall continue to discharge the same as Acting President; otherwise, the President shall resume the powers and duties of his office.

ARTICLE XXVI
(ratified July 1971)

Section 1

The right of citizens of the United States, who are 18 years of age or older, to vote shall not be denied or abridged by the United States or by any State on account of age.

Section 2

The Congress shall have power to enforce this article by appropriate legislation.

By Article IV, Section 3 of the Constitution, implemented by vote of Congress and referendum in the territory concerned, Alaska was admitted into the United States on 3 January 1959, and Hawaii on 21 August 1959.

Judicial System

Each State has a judicial system similar to the Federal system listed below, with a Supreme Court and subsidiary courts, to deal with cases arising under State Law. These courts deal with most crimes, divorces and civil state law. Each State has its own prison system, bar association of lawyers and its own body of laws.

SUPREME COURT OF THE UNITED STATES

The Press

The USA publishes more newspapers and periodicals than any other country. Most dailies give a greater emphasis to local news because of the strong interest in local and regional affairs and the decentralized structure of many government services. These factors, together with the distribution problem inherent in the size of the country, are responsible for the lack of national newspapers. Almost every small town has its own paper.

Most influential and highly respected among the few newspapers with a national readership are the New York Times, (notably its massive Sunday edition), Washington Post, Los Angeles Times, Christian Science Monitor and Wall Street Journal, the financial and news daily with editions in New York City, California, Illinois and Texas, and a European edition based in Brussels, Belgium. In September 1982 the first national general interest newspaper, USA Today, was introduced by Gannett, published simultaneously in 24 cities and with editorial headquarters near Washington, DC. An international edition was launched in 1984.

In 1983, 38 daily newspapers had circulations of over 250,000 copies. Among the largest of these in daily circulation are New York Daily News, Wall Street Journal, Los Angeles Times, New York Times, Chicago Tribune, Chicago Sun-Times, New York Post, Detroit News and Washington Post.

At the end of 1983 there were 1,701 English language daily newspapers (29 all-day papers, 446 morning, 1,284 evening) with a combined circulation of 62,644,603 copies per day. The Sunday edition is an important and distinctive feature of US newspaper publishing; many Sunday newspapers run to over 200 pages. At the end of 1983 there were 772 Sunday newspapers with a total circulation of 56,747,436. At the end of 1983 there were 7,547 weekly papers with a total circulation of over 44m.

The aggregate circulation of the 11,969 periodicals published in the USA in 1984 exceeded 200m.

The famous tradition of press freedom in the USA is grounded in the First Amendment to the Constitution which declares that 'Congress shall make no law . . . abridging the freedom of speech or of the Press . . .' and confirmed in the legislations of many states which prohibit any kind of legal restriction on the dissemination of news.

Legislation affecting the press is both state and federal. A source of controversy between the Press and the courts has been the threat of the encroachment by judicial decrees on the area of courtroom and criminal trial coverage. In 1972 the Supreme Court ruled that journalists were not entitled to refuse to give evidence before grand juries on information they have received confidentially. Since then the frequent issuing of subpoenas to journalists and the jailing of several reporters for refusing to disclose sources has led to many 'shield' bills being put before Congress and state legislatures calling for immunity for journalists from both federal and state jurisdiction.

In recent years, increased production costs have subjected the industry to considerable economic strain, resulting in mergers and takeovers, a great decline in competition between dailies in the same city, and the appearance of inter-city dailies catering for two or more adjoining centres.

One consequence of modern economic trends has been the steady growth of newspaper groups or chains. At the end of 1983 there were approximately 149 newspaper groups publishing 1,173 daily newspapers in the USA.

The following are among the principal groups:

Gannett Newspapers: Lincoln Tower, Rochester, NY 14604; tel. (716) 546-8600; Chair. and CEO Allen H. Neuharth; 87 newspapers.

FINANCE

BANKING

Commercial Banking System

As might be expected the US banking system is the largest and in many respects the most comprehensive and sophisticated in the world. Banking has, however, been largely subject to state rather than federal jurisdiction, and this has created a structure very different from that in other advanced industrial countries. In general no bank may open branches or acquire subsidiaries in states other than that in which it is based. Some states also restrict banks to a single branch, or to operating only in certain counties of the state. The strict federal anti-trust laws also limit mergers of banks within a state. The effect of these measures has been to preserve the independence of a very large number of banks: over 14,000 in 1984. Nevertheless, the dominant banks are the main banks in the big industrial states; of the 10 largest, six are based in New York and two each in California and Illinois.

The possession of bank accounts and the use of banking facilities are perhaps more widespread among all classes and regions than in any other country. This has had important effects on monetary theory and policy, as bank credit has become much more important than currency supply in the regulation of the economy. The use of current accounts and credit cards is so common that many authorities claim the US can be regarded as effectively a cashless society.

Bank Holding Companies

Since 1956 bank holding companies, corporations that control one or more banks in the USA, have become significant elements in the banking system. At the end of 1983 there were 5,371 bank holding companies in the USA. These organizations control commercial banks which hold about 87% of the total assets of insured commercial banks in the USA.

Expansion Overseas

Since the mid-1960s, the leading banks have rapidly expanded their overseas interests. At the end of 1960 there were only about 15 branches of US banks in Europe and a negligible number elsewhere. By the end of 1983 some 165 banks operated over 900 branches outside the USA, which held more than $270,000m. in deposits from non-affiliates. The three largest US banks, which also hold substantial equity interests in foreign banks, accounted for 456 of these branches.

The main factors behind the expansion overseas are the geographical limitations imposed by law at home; the rapid expansion of US business interests abroad and their preference for dealing with a US bank; the faster economic growth of certain foreign countries; and finally the profitability of the 'Eurodollar' capital market.

In December 1981 the Federal Reserve Board sanctioned the establishment of domestic International Banking Facilities (IBF), permitting commercial banks within the US to transact certain types of foreign deposit and loan business on which tax liability does not apply. These activities are also free of most regulatory restrictions. By the end of 1983 assets held in such accounts exceeded $198,000m.

Federal Reserve System

(20th St and Constitution Ave, NW, Washington, DC 20551; tel. (202) 452-3204)

The Federal Reserve System, founded in 1913, comprises the Board of Governors, the Federal Open Market Committee, the Federal Advisory Council, the Consumer Advisory Council, the Thrift Institutions Advisory Council, and the 12 Federal Reserve Banks with 25 branches.

The Board of Governors is composed of seven members appointed by the President of the United States with the advice and consent of the Senate.

The Reserve Banks are empowered to issue Federal Reserve notes fully secured by the following assets, alone or in any combination: (1) Gold certificates; (2) US Government and agency securities; (3) Other eligible assets as described by statute; and (4) Special Drawing Rights certificates. The Reserve Banks may discount paper for depository institutions and make properly secured advances to depository institutions. Federal Reserve Banks were established by Congress as the operating arms of the nation's central banking system. Many of the services performed by this network for depository institutions and for the government are similar to services performed by banks and thrifts for business customers and individuals. Reserve Banks hold the cash reserves of depository institutions and make loans to them. They move currency and coin into and out of circulation, and collect and process millions of cheques each day. They provide banking services for the Treasury, issue and redeem government securities, and act in other ways as fiscal agent for the US Government. The Banks also take part in the primary responsibility of the Federal Reserve System, the setting of monetary policy, through participation on the Federal Open Market Committee.

At the end of 1983, 5,804 of the nation's 14,451 Federal and State-chartered banks, accounting for some 78% of consolidated total assets (assets in the USA as well as foreign offices of US banks), were members of the Federal Reserve System.

The Comptroller of the Currency has primary supervisory authority over national banks, and the banking supervisors of the States have similar jurisdiction over banks organized under State laws. State member banks are examined by the Federal Reserve.

UNITED STATES EXTERNAL TERRITORIES

AMERICAN SAMOA

Introductory Survey

Location, Climate, Language, Religion, Flag, Capital

American Samoa comprises the seven islands of Tutuila, Tau, Olosega, Ofu, Aunuu, Rose and Swain's. They lie in the southern central Pacific Ocean, along latitude 14°S at about longitude 170°W, about 3,700 km (2,300 miles) south-west of Hawaii. The temperature normally ranges between 21°C and 32°C, and the average annual rainfall is 5,000 mm, the greatest precipitation occurring between December and March. English and Samoan, a Polynesian language, are spoken. The population is largely Christian, more than 50% being members of the Christian Congregational Church. The flag has a dark blue field, on which is superimposed a red-edged white triangle (with its apex at the hoist and its base at the outer edge of the flag), containing an eagle, representing the USA, grasping in its talons a yellow fue (staff) and uatogi (club), Samoan symbols of sovereignty. The capital is Pago Pago, on Tutuila.

Recent History

The Samoan islands were first visited by Europeans in the 1700s, but it was not until 1830 that missionaries from the London Missionary Society settled there. In 1878 the Kingdom of Samoa, then an independent state, gave the USA the right to establish a naval base at Pago Pago. The UK and Germany were also interested in the islands, but the UK withdrew in 1899, leaving the western islands for Germany to govern. The chiefs of the eastern islands ceded their lands to the USA in 1904, and the islands officially became an unincorporated territory of the USA in 1922.

Until 1978 American Samoa was administered by a Governor, appointed by the US Government, and a legislature comprising a Senate and a House of Representatives. In November 1977 the first gubernatorial elections were held and, in January 1978, Peter Coleman was inaugurated as Governor, with Tufele Li'a as Lieutenant-Governor. Both were re-elected for a second term in November 1980, after three years in office instead of four (four years is the normal term prescribed in the American Samoan Constitution), to allow synchronization with US elections in 1980. In March 1984 Coleman submitted proposals for a new American Samoan Constitution to the US Congress for ratification. However, it was feared that Congress would reject the proposals, because they included a provision limiting the right to hold public office to citizens of American Samoan ancestry, which might be considered a restriction on racial grounds, instead of to US citizens as a whole, and the proposals were withdrawn in May. At elections in November 1984, A. P. Lutali was elected Governor and Faleomavaega Eni Hunkin was elected Lieutenant-Governor. The High Court of American Samoa had ruled earlier that Coleman was ineligible to stand for a third term as Governor, because a law restricted tenure by any individual to two terms and Coleman's first term was considered to count as a full term for the purpose of the law.

Government

Executive power is vested in the Governor, who is elected by popular vote and has authority which extends to all operations within the territory of American Samoa. He has the power of veto with respect to bills passed by the Fono (Legislature). The Fono consists of a Senate and a House of Representatives, with a President and a Speaker presiding over their respective divisions. The Senate is composed of 18 members, elected, according to Samoan custom, from local chiefs, or matai, for a term of four years. The House of Representatives consists of 20 members who are elected by popular vote for a term of two years, and a non-voting delegate from Swain's Island. The Fono meets twice a year, in January and July, for not more than 45 days, and at such special sessions as the Governor may call. The Governor has the authority to appoint heads of government departments with the approval of the Fono. Local government is carried out by indigenous officials.

Economic Affairs

The American Samoan economy and urban life are strongly oriented towards the USA. Tuna-canning plants at Pago Pago process fish from US, Taiwanese and South Korean vessels, and tuna products constituted 98.8% of exports in 1981. However, local fishermen are able to supply only an insignificant amount of tuna, as they cannot obtain sufficient capital to buy boats and equipment for tuna-fishing. Fish-canning employs more than 15% of the total workforce, and other activities include meat-canning, handicrafts and dairy farming. Agricultural production is increasing, but very little is exported. Major crops are coconuts, bananas, taro, pineapples, yams and breadfruit. The tourist industry is developing slowly. At the end of December 1984 the annual rate of inflation was 2.3%.

Transport and Communications

American Samoa has about 150 km of paved roads and 200 km of secondary roads. There is an international airport at Tafuna, near Pago Pago, and smaller airstrips on the islands of Tau and Ofu. Pago Pago, the main seaport, has a natural deep-water harbour.

Social Welfare

In 1978 American Samoa had 187 hospital beds, and there were 26 physicians working in the territory.

Education

In 1980 there were 130 early childhood centres, 24 elementary schools, four public high schools and a special education school, with a total enrolment of 9,879; in addition, a total of 1,994 pupils attended eight private schools.

Tourism

The tourist industry is encouraged by the Government, but suffers from the cost and paucity of air services linking American Samoa with its main sources of custom, particularly the USA. Pago Pago is an important mid-Pacific stop-over for large passenger aircraft; there were 52,087 visitors to the territory in 1982, but only a small proportion of these (about 11,000 in 1978) stayed as tourists.

Public Holidays

1985: 27 May (Memorial Day), 4 July (Independence Day), 2 September (Labor Day), 28 November (Thanksgiving Day), 25 December (Christmas Day).

1986: 1 January (New Year's Day), 17 February (for George Washington's Birthday), 17 April (Flag Day, commemorating the first raising of the US flag in American Samoa).

Weights and Measures

With certain exceptions, the imperial system is in force. One US billion equals 1,000 million; one US cwt equals 100 lb; one long ton equals 2,240 lb; one short ton equals 2,000 lb. A policy of gradual voluntary conversion to the metric system is being encouraged by the federal government.

Currency and Exchange Rate

United States currency: 100 cents = 1 US dollar.

Exchange rate (31 December 1984):
£1 sterling = US $1.159.

The Constitution

American Samoa is administered by the US Department of the Interior. According to the 1967 constitution, executive power is vested in the Governor. The Governor's authority extends to all operations within the territory of American Samoa. He has veto power with respect to bills passed by the Fono (Legislature). The Fono consists of a Senate and a House of Representatives, with a President and a Speaker presiding over their respective divisions. The Senate is composed of 18 members, elected, according to Samoan custom, from local chiefs, or matai, for a term of four years. The House of Representatives consists of 20 members who are elected by popular vote for a term of two years, and a non-voting delegate from Swain's Island. The Fono meets twice a year, in January and July, for not more than 45 days and at such special sessions as the Governor may call. The Governor has the authority to appoint heads of government departments with the approval of the Fono. Local government is carried out by indigenous officials. In August 1976 a referendum on the popular election of a Governor and a Lieutenant-Governor resulted in an affirmative vote. The first gubernatorial elections were held on 8 November 1977 and the second occurred in November 1980; subsequent elections were to take place every four years.

GUAM

Introductory Survey

Location, Climate, Language, Religion, Flag, Capital

Guam is the southernmost and largest of the Mariana Islands, situated about 2,170 km (1,350 miles) south of Tokyo (Japan) and 5,300 km (3,300 miles) west of Honolulu (Hawaii). The temperature normally ranges between 24°C and 30°C in June–November, but is generally cooler and drier from December to May. The average annual rainfall is about 2,000 mm. English is the official language, but Japanese and Chamorro, the local language, are also spoken. The principal religion is Christianity, about 93% of the population being Roman Catholics. The national flag of the United States of America (q.v.) is used by Guam. The capital is Agaña.

Recent History

Members of a Spanish expedition, under the Portuguese navigator Fernão Magalhães (Ferdinand Magellan), were the first Europeans to discover Guam, visiting the island in 1521, during a voyage that accomplished the first circumnavigation of the globe. The island was claimed by Spain in 1565 and the first Jesuit missionaries arrived three years later. The native Micronesian population is estimated to have fallen from 100,000 in 1521 to fewer than 5,000 in 1741, owing largely to a combination of aggression by the Spaniards and exposure to imported diseases. The intermarrying of Micronesians, Spaniards and Filipinos resulted in the people called Chamorros today. Guam was ceded to the USA after the Spanish–American War of 1898, but was invaded by Japan in 1941. Fierce fighting took place before the island was recaptured by US forces in 1944.

Guam became an unincorporated territory of the USA, under the jurisdiction of the US Department of the Interior, in 1950. In 1970 the island elected its first Governor, and in 1972 a new law gave Guam one delegate to the US House of Representatives. The delegate may vote in committee but not on the floor of the House. In September 1976 an island-wide referendum decided that Guam should maintain close ties with the USA, but that negotiations should be held to improve the island's status. In a further referendum, in 1982, in which only 38% of voters chose to take part, the status of a Commonwealth, in association with the USA, was the most favoured of six options, supported by 48% of the votes cast, and in June 1984 it was reported that the territory's Legislature would soon be considering a draft act embodying this decision.

Government

Guam is governed under the Organic Act of Guam of 1950, which gave the island statutory local power of self-government and made its inhabitants citizens of the United States, although they cannot vote in national elections. Their delegate to the US House of Representatives is elected every two years. Executive power is vested in a civilian Governor, who is elected by popular vote every four years. The Government has 15 executive departments, whose heads are appointed by the Governor with the consent of the Guam Legislature. The Legislature consists of 21 members elected by popular vote every two years. It is empowered to pass laws on local matters, including taxation and fiscal appropriations.

Defence

Guam is an important strategic military base for the USA, with about 10,000 US servicemen stationed there in 1980.

Economic Affairs

The economy is based on the export of copra, fish and handicrafts. Industrial enterprises, including a petroleum refinery, a brewery, and textile and garment firms, were established in the early 1970s, in addition to existing smaller-scale manufacturing of soft drinks and watches. Re-exports constitute a high proportion of Guam's exports, which amounted to US $61.0m. in 1980, major commodities being petroleum and petroleum products, iron and steel scrap, and eggs, but the territory's oil refinery closed down for an indefinite period in March 1984 after the US Government, a principal customer, had decided to buy cheaper fuel for its military base on Guam from refineries in Singapore. Fruit and vegetables, including water-melons, maize, sweet potatoes, cassava, bananas, breadfruit, coconuts and sugar-cane, are grown mainly for local consumption. Pigs are an important source of meat. Tourism is expanding rapidly: more than 300,000 tourists, of whom about 80% are Japanese, visit the island each year, and annual tourist expenditure is estimated at more than US $150m., providing about 20% of government revenue.

Transport and Communications

Guam has 674 km of all-weather roads, and is served by an international airport at Tamuning and a seaport in Apra Harbour.

Social Welfare

Guam had four hospitals, with a total of 223 beds, in 1979, and there were 70 physicians working in the territory in 1978.

Education

School attendance is compulsory from six to 16 years of age. There were 37 public and 18 private schools operating on the island in 1980, including six senior high schools. Total school enrolment was more than 34,364, including 18,697 elementary school pupils.

Tourism

Tourism is an important industry on Guam, the island receiving 368,665 visitors in 1984. About 70%–80% of tourists come from Japan. Most of Guam's hotels are situated in, or near to, Agaña, where amenities for entertainment are well developed. The southern part of the island is visited for its mountainous scenery.

Public Holidays

1986: 1 January (New Year's Day), 17 February (for George Washington's Birthday).

Weights and Measures

With certain exceptions, the imperial system is in force. One US billion equals 1,000 million; one US cwt equals 100 lb; one long ton equals 2,240 lb; one short ton equals 2,000 lb. A policy of gradual voluntary conversion to the metric system is being encouraged by the federal government.

NORTHERN MARIANA ISLANDS

Introductory Survey

Location, Climate, Language, Religion, Flag, Capital

The Commonwealth of the Northern Mariana Islands comprises 16 islands (all the Marianas except Guam) in the western Pacific Ocean, about 5,300 km (3,300 miles) west of Honolulu (Hawaii). The temperature normally ranges between 24°C and 30°C in June–November, but is generally cooler and drier from December to May. The average annual rainfall is about 2,000 mm. English is the official language. The population is predominantly Christian, mainly Roman Catholic. The national flag of the United States of America (q.v.) is used by the Northern Mariana Islands. Six islands, including the three largest (Saipan, Tinian and Rota), are inhabited; the principal settlement and the administrative centre are on Saipan.

Recent History

The islands which comprise the Northern Mariana Islands were first sighted by Europeans during the 1520s, and were claimed for Spain in 1565. They were sold to Germany in 1898, but control was transferred to Japan, which had taken the islands from Germany in 1914, by the League of Nations in 1921. The USA captured Saipan and Tinian from the Japanese after fierce fighting in 1944, and the Northern Mariana Islands became a part of the US Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands (q.v.) in 1947.

In June 1975 the Northern Mariana Islands voted for separate status as a US commonwealth territory, and in March 1976 President Ford signed the Northern Marianas Commonwealth Covenant. In October 1977 President Carter approved the constitution of the Northern Mariana Islands, which provides that, from January 1978, the former Marianas District is internally self-governing. In December 1977 elections were held for a bicameral legislature, a governor and a lieutenant-governor. The residents of the islands are not expected to obtain full citizenship of the USA until negotiations to decide the future status of the Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands are completed and the trusteeship is ended; however, in July 1984 it was reported that US President Reagan had signed a proclamation giving residents of the Northern Mariana Islands a broad range of civil and political rights in the USA, including equal employment opportunities within the federal government, civil service and armed forces. Negotiations with landowners on Tinian were taking place in 1984 over the terms of use by the US Government of land for military purposes.

Government

Legislative authority is vested in the Northern Marianas Commonwealth Legislature, a bicameral body consisting of a Senate and a House of Representatives. There are nine senators elected for four-year terms and 14 members of the House of Representatives elected for two-year terms. Executive authority is vested in the Governor, who is elected by popular vote.

Economic Affairs

Vegetables, beef and pork are the principal commodities exported by the Northern Mariana Islands. Agriculture is concentrated in smallholdings, important crops being coconuts, breadfruit, tomatoes and melons. Cattle-ranching was established on Tinian during the 1960s. Small-scale industry includes handicrafts and the processing of fish and copra. Tourism is an important industry, employing about 10% of the work-force. The islands were to receive US $14m. in direct aid for each of the seven years after 1978, and additional income is expected to come from US federal welfare and development programmes.

Transport and Communications

Saipan, Tinian and Rota are well served by roads. There is an international airport on Saipan, and Tinian, Rota and Pagan each has an airstrip. The Territory's principal seaport is on Saipan.

Social Welfare

Information on social welfare in the Northern Mariana Islands is included in that applying to the Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands (see p. 2828).

Education

Information on education in the Northern Mariana Islands is included in that applying to the Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands (see p. 2828).

Tourism

Tourism is an important industry in the Northern Mariana Islands, which received 119,370 visitors in 1981.

TRUST TERRITORY OF THE PACIFIC ISLANDS

Introductory Survey

Location, Climate, Language, Religion, Flag, Capital

The US Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands consists of 2,125 islands covering about 1,300 sq km (500 sq miles) of land and scattered over 7.5m. sq km (2.9m. sq miles) of ocean. The Territory lies within the area (which includes Kiribati, Tuvalu and other territories) known as Micronesia. Most of the islands lie in a band which begins about 800 km east of the Philippines and stretches 4,800 km east across the Pacific Ocean towards Hawaii. The Trust Territory comprises the Republic of Palau in the west and the Federated States of Micronesia in its central part, which together occupy the Caroline Islands group, and the Republic of the Marshall Islands in the east. The Federated States of Micronesia includes (from west to east) the states of Yap, Truk, Pohnpei (formerly Ponape, renamed in November 1984) and Kosrae. The Marianas District has achieved separate status as the Northern Mariana Islands (q.v.) and became a commonwealth territory of the USA in 1978, but it remains legally a part of the Trusteeship. The Caroline Islands are subject to heavy rainfall, although precipitation decreases from east to west; rainfall in the Marshall Islands decreases from south to north. January, February and March are the driest months throughout the Territory, although seasonal variations in rainfall and temperature are generally small. The native population is divided into nine ethno-linguistic groups, but English is widely understood. The principal religion is Christianity, much of the population being Roman Catholic. The flag of the Republic of Palau (proportions five by three) features a golden disc (representing the Moon) placed centrally on a light-blue background. The flag of the Federated States of Micronesia consists of four five-pointed white stars, arranged as a diamond, situated centrally on a light-blue background. The flag of the Republic of the Marshall Islands is blue, with a representation of the sun in the upper hoist; superimposed across the field are two narrow triangles (red above white), with their bases in the upper fly and their apexes meeting at the foot of the hoist. The capital of the Republic of Palau is Koror, on Koror Island; Kolonia, on Pohnpei, is the capital of the Federated States of Micronesia; and the Dalap-Uliga-Darrit Municipality, on Majuro Atoll, is the capital of the Republic of the Marshall Islands.

Recent History

The first European contact with the Marshall and Caroline Islands was by Spanish expeditions in the 1500s, including those led by the Portuguese navigator Fernão de Magalhães (Ferdinand Magellan), who sailed through the islands in 1521, and the Spaniard Miguel de Saavedra, who visited the Marshall Islands in 1529. Spanish influence in the islands was eroded towards the end of the 19th century: Germany annexed the Marshall Islands in 1885, and in 1899 bought from Spain the Caroline Islands and the Northern Mariana Islands (except Guam, which had been ceded to the USA after the Spanish–American War of 1898). German control ended in 1914, when Japan occupied the islands at the beginning of the First World War, receiving a mandate for its administration from the League of Nations in 1920. Under the Germans, and more so under the Japanese, a policy of colonization and exploitation of natural resources was pursued. However, after the capture of the islands by US military forces in 1944 and 1945, most of the Japanese settlers were repatriated, and a Trust Territory was established by the United Nations in 1947 to allow the USA to administer the region. The territory was governed by the US Navy from 1947 until 1951, when control passed to a civil administration, although the Northern Mariana Islands remained under military control until 1962.

Since 1965 there have been increasing demands for local autonomy. In that year the Congress of Micronesia was formed, and in 1967 a commission to examine the future political status of the islands was established. In 1970 it declared Micronesians' rights to sovereignty over their own lands, self-determination, the right to form their own constitution and the right to revoke any form of free association with the USA. In May 1977, after eight years of negotiations, President Carter announced that his administration intended to take steps to terminate the Trusteeship agreement by 1981.

On 9 January 1978 the Marianas District achieved separate status as the Commonwealth of the Northern Mariana Islands (see p. 2825); it remains legally a part of the Trusteeship until the future status of the Trust Territory is decided. The Marshall Islands District drafted its own Constitution, which came into effect on 1 May 1979, and the four districts of Yap, Truk, Ponape (formally renamed Pohnpei in November 1984) and Kosrae ratified a new Constitution, to become the Federated States of Micronesia on 10 May 1979. In the Palau District a referendum in July 1979 approved a proposed local Constitution, which came into effect on 1 January 1981, when the district became the Republic of Palau.

The USA signed a Compact of Free Association with the Republic of Palau in August 1982, and with the Marshall Islands and the Federated States of Micronesia in October. The trusteeship of the islands was due to end after the principle and terms of the Compacts had been approved by the respective peoples and legislatures of the new countries, by the US Congress and by the United Nations Security Council. Under the Compacts, the four countries (including the Northern Mariana Islands) would be independent of each other and would manage both their internal and foreign affairs separately, while the USA would be responsible for defence and security. More than 60% of Palauans voted in February 1983 to support their Compact, but fewer than the required 75% approved changing the Constitution to allow the transit and storage of nuclear materials. The US Government claimed that it could not fulfil its defence obligations as defined in the Compact, unless the problem over nuclear materials was solved. In September 1983 the Palau Supreme Court ruled that the Compact had effectively been defeated in the plebiscite. A revised Compact, which contained no reference to nuclear issues, was approved by 66% of votes cast in a plebiscite in September 1984. However, the US Government had hoped for a favourable majority of 75% of the votes cast, which would have allowed the terms of the Compact to override the provisions of the Palau Constitution in the event of a conflict between the two; and, in claiming that it was unable to fulfil its defence obligations under the Compact if its operations with nuclear materials were restricted, the US Government would have had cause to exploit this mechanism. The Compacts with the Federated States of Micronesia and the Marshall Islands were approved in plebiscites in June and September 1983 respectively. The Congress of the Federated States of Micronesia ratified the country's decision in September. Under the Compact with the Marshall Islands,the USA was to retain its military bases in the Marshall Islands for at least 15 years and, over the same period, was to provide US $2,000m. in aid.

Bikini and Eniwetok atolls, in the Marshall Islands, have been used by the US Government for experiments with nuclear weapons, Bikini in 1946–58 and Eniwetok in 1948–58. The native inhabitants of Eniwetok were evacuated before tests began, and were allowed to return to the atoll in 1980, after much of the contaminated area had been rendered safe. However, the inhabitants of Bikini atoll were still campaigning for similar treatment in 1984, fearing that the USA would deny further responsibility for the atoll, according to the terms of the Compact of Free Association with the Marshall Islands Government, if the trusteeship of the region were terminated. Another atoll in the Marshall Islands, Kwajalein, is used as a target for the testing of missiles fired from California, in the USA, and, under the terms of the Compact, the US Government is committed to providing an estimated US $170m. in rent, over a period of 30 years, for land used as the site of a missile-tracking station, and a further $80m. for development projects. The native inhabitants of Kwajalein atoll were concentrated on Ebeye, a small island in the atoll, adjacent to the US base on Kwajalein Island, before testing of the missiles began in 1961. In November 1984 it was reported that a reafforestation programme had commenced on Ebeye.

Ponape, one of the constituent states of the Federated States of Micronesia, changed its name to Pohnpei in November 1984, when its Constitution came into effect.

Government

The Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands is a United Nations Trusteeship administered by the USA. Executive and administrative authority is exercised by a High Commissioner, appointed by the President of the USA with the consent and approval of the US Senate. The High Commissioner is under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior.

On 1 May 1979 the locally drafted Constitution of the Marshall Islands became effective. The Constitution provides for a parliamentary form of government with legislative authority vested in the 33-member Nitijela. On 10 May 1979 the locally drafted Constitution of the Federated States of Micronesia, incorporating the four districts of Kosrae, Yap, Ponape (formally renamed Pohnpei in November 1984) and Truk, became effective. Each of the four districts has its own legislature. A locally drafted Constitution for Palau came into effect on 1 January 1981, and the islands became known as the Republic of Palau.

With the establishment of duly constituted Micronesian governments, the role of the High Commissioner, as the chief executive of the Trust Territory, was altered to provide for the maximum permissible amount of local self-government. The High Commissioner retains only that authority necessary to carry out the obligations and responsibilities of the USA under the terms of the 1947 Trusteeship Agreement and other treaties, laws and regulations generally applicable in the Trust Territory.

Local governmental units are the municipalities and villages. Elected Magistrates and Councils govern the municipalities. Village government is largely traditional.

Economic Affairs

The islands of the Trust Territory are small and widely scattered, making external trade difficult and expensive. Farming and fishing are mainly on a subsistence level, the principal agricultural crops being coconuts, cassava and sweet potatoes. The tourist industry, by comparison, is an important source of foreign exchange, although the difficulty of gaining access to the islands, and a lack of suitable facilities, have hindered its development. The Trust Territory has a few mineral deposits: they are mostly of little commercial value, but plans were announced in 1984 for the development of high-grade phosphate deposits on Ailinglaplap atoll in the Marshall Islands. An offshore banking system operates in the Marshall Islands. Financial assistance from the USA, often linked with military concessions by the recipient countries, contributes a large part of the islands' external revenue.

Transport and Communications

Macadam and concrete roads are found on the more important islands, while other islands have stone- and coral-surfaced roads and tracks. Much internal travel, both between islands and between two points on a single island, is by small boat. The Marshall Islands has an international airport on Majuro and 10 airstrips elsewhere in the country. In the Federated States of Micronesia there are international airports on Pohnpei, Moen (state of Truk) and Yap. A commercial dock is situated on each of the seven major islands.

Social Welfare

In 1978 the Trust Territory (including the Northern Mariana Islands) had seven hospitals, with a total of 462 beds, and there were 48 physicians working in the islands.

Education

Education is compulsory between the ages of six and 14. In 1981, 31,099 children attended the Territory's 245 primary schools, which were served by 1,374 teachers (a provisional figure). Pupils at secondary schools numbered 6,872 in 1981, and were taught by a total (provisional) of 445 teachers. Institutions at tertiary level catered for 2,129 students in 1980 and were served by 158 teachers in 1979. Total expenditure on education was US $26,129,000 in 1981.

Tourism

Tourism in most of the islands of the Trust Territory is hindered by a lack of transport facilities. About one-half of the tourists come from the USA and one-third from Japan.

Weights and Measures

With certain exceptions, the imperial system is in force. One US billion equals 1,000 million; one US cwt equals 100lb; one long ton equals 2,240 lb; one short ton equals 2,000 lb. A policy of gradual voluntary conversion to the metric system is being encouraged by the US federal government

Transport

ROADS

Macadam and concrete roads are found in the more important islands. Other islands have stone and coral-surfaced roads and tracks. By 1976 there were about 200 km of paved road and 550 km of unpaved.

SHIPPING

There are seven commercial docks; one on each of the major inhabited islands.

Most shipping in the Territory is government-organized. (See the chapter on the Northern Mariana Islands.) However, Nauru Pacific Line operates a regular container service from Melbourne (Australia) to Truk, Pohnpei, Kosrae and Majuro and other services from San Francisco (USA) and Honolulu (Hawaii) to Majuro, Pohnpei and Truk. The Kyowa Line operates a monthly service from Hong Kong, Taiwan, the Republic of Korea and Japan to Truk and Pohnpei. The Micronesia Transport Line operates a service from Sydney (Australia) to Palau, Yap, Guam, Saipan (Northern Mariana Islands), Truk and Pohnpei. Other commercial carriers which serve the Marshall Islands include Pacific Micronesian Lines, Philippine Micronesia and Orient Navigation (PM & O), Tiger Line, Nippon Yusen Kaisha, and Matson Line.

CIVIL AVIATION

Airline of the Marshall Islands: POB 959, Majuro, Marshall Islands 96960; tel. 3373; telex 0929; f. 1980; provides an internal service for the Marshall Islands and international flights to Nadi (Fiji), Tarawa (Kiribati) and Funafuti (Tuvalu); Pres. AMATA KABUA; Gen. Man. TIM SMITH; fleet of 1 HS-748, 1 Nomad N-22B and 1 Nomad N-24A.

UNITED STATES VIRGIN ISLANDS

Introductory Survey

Location, Climate, Language, Religion, Flag, Capital

The territory consists of three main inhabited islands (St Croix, St Thomas and St John) and about 50 smaller islands, mostly uninhabited. They are situated at the eastern end of the Greater Antilles, about 64 km (40 miles) east of Puerto Rico in the Caribbean Sea. The climate is tropical, although tempered by the prevailing easterly trade winds. The temperature averages 26°C (79°F), with little variation between winter and summer. The humidity is low for the tropics. English is the official language, but Spanish and Creole are also widely used. There is a strong religious tradition, and most of the inhabitants are Christians, mainly Protestants. The flag (proportions 3 by 2) is white, with a modified version of the US coat of arms (an eagle holding an olive branch in one foot and a sheaf of arrows in the other, with a shield, comprising a small horizontal blue panel above vertical red and white stripes, superimposed), between the letters V and I, in the centre. The capital is Charlotte Amalie, on the island of St Thomas.

Recent History

The Virgin Islands, originally inhabited by Carib and Arawak Indians, were discovered by Europeans in 1493. The group subsequently passed through English, French, and Dutch control, before the western part became the Danish West Indies. In 1917 these islands were bought from Denmark by the USA for US $25m. They were administered by the Navy Department until being transferred to the Department of the Interior in 1931.

The inhabitants of the islands were granted a measure of self-government by an Organic Act, as revised in 1954, which created an elected 15-member Senate. Since 1970, executive authority has been vested in an elected Governor and Lieutenant-Governor. The Democratic Party has been the majority party for many years, but in the first gubernatorial election, in 1970, the Republican incumbent, Melvin Evans, retained office. In 1974 Cyril E. King, leader of the Independent Citizens Movement (a breakaway faction of the Democratic Party), was elected Governor. On King's death in 1978, the former Lieutenant-Governor, Juan Luis, was elected Governor. He was returned to power in the 1982 election.

Since 1954 there have been four attempts to redraft the constitution to give the US Virgin Islands greater autonomy. Each draft has, however, been rejected by a referendum, most recently in November 1981, when only about 50% of the electorate took part. Hence there is no substantial sentiment for independence or greater autonomy, especially since such moves would involve higher taxes or economic problems. The US Government has expressed the view that it would welcome reform, if approved by the islanders, as long as it were economically feasible and did not endanger US national security.

Economic Affairs

The islands are heavily dependent on links to the US mainland. More than 90% of trade is conducted with Puerto Rico and the USA. Natural resources are scarce, and the islands rely almost entirely on imports.

Tourism is the islands' major source of work and income. The emphasis is on the visiting cruise-ship business, and the advantages of duty-free products for American visitors. However, the influx of tourists has caused social problems. Following a decline in tourist numbers since 1979, owing to the world recession, the industry revived sharply in 1984, producing an income of $360m.

Rum is an important product, earning money from refunded US excise duty at the rate of about $40m. per year. Attempts by Governor Luis in 1983 to persuade the US Congress to ban bulk rum imports from CARICOM states have distanced the US Virgin Islands from its East Caribbean neighbours.

St Croix has the world's largest petroleum refinery, with a capacity of 728,000 b/d. It is hoped that this refinery and an alumina processing plant, using African bauxite, will employ 15% of St Croix's labour force by the end of the century. Efforts have been made to introduce labour-intensive and non-polluting manufacturing industries. Most of the land is unsuitable for large-scale cultivation, but tax incentives have encouraged the growing of food crops and fruit. Sorghum has been introduced successfully to St Croix.

Since the early 1960s the population has increased dramatically. Nearly one-third of the island's inhabitants are aliens, and immigration is a major problem, not only by people from neighbouring Caribbean countries, but also by white settlers, attracted by the climate and the low taxes. According to estimates by the World Bank, the islands' GNP (at average 1979–81 prices) was US $640m. ($6,520 per head) in 1980, rising to $710m. ($7,010 per head) in 1981. Between 1970 and 1980 the population increased at an average rate of 4.4% annually, while GNP per head declined, in real terms, by 2.3% per year. In addition, local prices and inflation have risen, so that the islands' society is becoming increasingly divided, both economically and socially.

Social Welfare

In 1984 the islands had 507 hospital beds and approximately 167 physicians in practice.

Education

Compulsory education, lasting 12 years, begins at five years of age. It generally consists of eight years at primary school and four years at secondary school. In 1984 there were 32,800 elementary and secondary students at public and private schools, and 1,365 teachers.

The Constitution

The Government of the US Virgin Islands is organized under the provisions of the Organic Act of the Virgin Islands, passed by the Congress of the United States in 1936 and revised in 1954. Subsequent amendments provided for the election of a non-voting Virgin Islands delegate to the US House of Representatives, commencing in 1968, and the popular election of the Governor of the Virgin Islands in 1970. Executive power is vested in the Governor, who appoints, with the advice and consent of the Legislature, the heads of the executive departments and may also appoint administrative assistants as his representatives on St John and St Croix. Legislative power is vested in the Legislature of the Virgin Islands, a unicameral body composed of 15 Senators, elected by popular vote. Legislation is subject to the approval of the Governor. All residents of the islands, who are citizens of the United States and at least 18 years of age, have the right to vote in local elections but not in national elections. In 1976 the Virgin Islands were granted the right to draft their own constitution, subject to the approval of the US President and Congress. A constitution permitting a degree of autonomy was drafted in 1978 and gained the necessary approval, but was then rejected by the people of the Virgin Islands in a referendum in March 1979. A fourth draft, providing for greater autonomy than the 1978 draft, was rejected in a referendum in November 1981.

The Government

Governor: Juan Luis.

Lieutenant-Governor: Julio A. Brady.

Regional Audit Manager: Roger E. Michaud (acting).

Department of Commerce—Division of Tourism: POB 6400, St Thomas 00801; offices in New York, Washington, Los Angeles, Chicago, Miami, Toronto, San Juan (Puerto Rico), London, Copenhagen and Frankfurt.

OTHER TERRITORIES

Johnston Atoll: in the Pacific Ocean, about 1,130 km (700 miles) west-south-west of Honolulu, Hawaii; comprises Johnston Island (population 327 in 1980) and Sand Island (uninhabited); area 1.3 sq km (0.5 sq mile); administered by the Defense Nuclear Agency, Washington, DC; in 1983 plans were announced to build a chemical disposal facility on the atoll.

Midway Islands: in the northern Pacific Ocean, about 1,850 km (1,150 miles) north-west of Hawaii; comprises Sand and Eastern Islands; area about 5 sq km (2 sq miles); population 453 (1980); administered by the US Navy Department, The Pentagon, Washington, DC 20350.

Wake Island: Wake and its neighbours, Wilkes and Peale Islands, lie in the Pacific Ocean, about 2,060 km (1,280 miles) east of Guam; area less than 8 sq km (3 sq miles); population 302 (1980); administered since 1972 by the US Air Force, The Pentagon, Washington, DC 20330.

URUGUAY

Introductory Survey

Location, Climate, Language, Religion, Flag, Capital

The Eastern Republic of Uruguay lies on the south-east coast of South America, with Brazil to the north and Argentina to the west. The climate is temperate, with an average winter temperature of 14°–16°C (57°–61°F) and an average summer temperature of 21°–28°C (70°–82°F). The language is Spanish. There is no state religion but Roman Catholicism is predominant. The national flag (proportions 3 by 2) has nine horizontal stripes (five white and four blue, alternating), with a square white canton, containing a golden sun, in the upper hoist. The capital is Montevideo.

Recent History

Since independence from Spain, gained in 1825, the political scene has been dominated by two parties: the Colorados ('reds' or Liberals) and the Blancos ('whites' or Conservatives). Their rivalry resulted in frequent outbreaks of civil war in the 19th century. From 1880 to 1958 the governing Colorado party was led by the Batlle family. Owing to the progressive policies of José Batlle y Ordóñez, Colorado President from 1903 to 1907 and 1911 to 1915, Uruguay became the first welfare state in Latin America. Between 1951 and 1966 the presidency was in abeyance, being replaced by a collective leadership.

In December 1967 Jorge Pacheco Areco assumed the presidency. His period in office was marked by massive increases in the cost of living, labour unrest and the spectacular exploits of the Tupamaro urban guerrilla movement. Elections were held in November 1971 and the official Colorado candidate, Juan María Bordaberry Arocena, was declared the winner, taking office in March 1972. The army took complete control of the campaign against the Tupamaros and by the end of 1973 had crushed the movement. Military intervention in civilian affairs led, in 1973, to the closure of Congress and its replacement by an appointed 25-member Council of State (subsequently increased to 35 members). The Partido Comunista (Communist Party) and other left-wing groups were banned; repressive measures, including strict press censorship, continued. In September 1974 army officers were placed in control of the major state-owned enterprises.

President Bordaberry was deposed by the army in June 1976 because of his refusal to countenance any return, however gradual, to constitutional rule. In July the recently formed Council of the Nation elected Dr Aparicio Méndez Manfredini to the presidency for five years. Despite the Government's announcement that there would be a return to democracy, persecution of political figures continued and the number of political prisoners held in 1976 was thought to have reached 6,000. Although the decision taken by the USA in 1979 to restore a fraction of its former military aid to Uruguay was governed by an easing of repression, the Red Cross reported in 1981 that some 1,100 political prisoners were still being held.

President Méndez introduced several constitutional amendments, known as Institutional Acts, to consolidate the internal situation and to create a 'new order'. By 1980 severe economic problems made the army anxious to return executive responsibility to civilian politicians. A new constitution, by which the armed forces would continue to be involved in all matters of national security, was drafted and submitted to a plebiscite in November 1980, but was rejected by a 57.8% 'no' vote. Disappointed by this result, the military leadership was forced to amend the draft constitution in consultation with leaders of the recognized political parties, and, in September 1981, a retired army general, Gregorio Alvarez Armellino, was appointed by the Joint Council of the Armed Forces to serve as President during the transition period to full civilian government.

In preparation for internal party elections held in November 1982, a law regulating political parties was approved by the Council of State in June. The ban on the Partido Demócrata Cristiano (Christian Democratic Party) and all left-wing parties remained in force, as well as the ban on several of the leaders within the Partido Colorado and the Partido Nacional (Blanco). As political activity increased, censorship was intensified and several newspapers were closed. The elections resulted in a victory for the anti-military candidates within the parties.

During 1983 the Political Affairs Commission of the armed forces (Comaspo) held negotiations with the three authorized political parties on amendments to the Constitution. The armed forces, anxious to preserve their authority in future governments, sought to make substantial changes to the existing Constitution. Among the 24 amendments that the military leaders requested were proposals for increased restrictions on the press and trade union organizations, the extension of executive powers under a state of siege and greater powers for military courts in dealing with cases of subversion. The political parties opposed any major changes to the Constitution, and in July the negotiations broke down.

Agreement over the transfer of power to a civilian government was further delayed by division within the armed forces. President Alvarez commanded the support of the hard-line faction within the military, which desired a postponement of the elections that were planned for 1984 and the imposition of an official 'partido de proceso', to be led by President Alvarez. This policy was opposed by the moderate faction, which was willing to seek a compromise with the political opposition.

The Government's reluctance to permit greater public freedom and to improve human rights caused serious unrest throughout 1983. Popular discontent was further aroused by the rapid deterioration of the Uruguayan economy and the effect of events in Argentina. In August the Government suspended all public political activity and reserved the right to impose a new constitution without consultation. The Government insisted that the original electoral timetable would be maintained. The political opposition responded by threatening to boycott the elections and by uniting with the proscribed opposition parties to hold a national day of protest. In September the trade union, Plenario Intersindical de Trabajadores (PIT), held the first organized labour protest for 10 years, which was supported by 500,000 workers. In response, the Government imposed severe new censorship guidelines and temporarily suspended two publications. In addition, Uruguay's only human rights organization, the Servicio Paz y Justicia (Serpaj), was banned. Following the arrest of Eladio Fernández Menéndez, a leading member of the Partido Nacional, another national protest, involving 80,000 people, was held in late September. All anti-Government protests were well supported throughout the country and were accompanied by the banging of pots and pans by protesters. A third national day of protest was held in October, when thousands of people attended rallies in support of democracy. During a banned demonstration in early November, violent clashes between military forces and demonstrators resulted in one death and 600 arrests. In late November a peaceful mass protest rally in Montevideo was attended by 400,000 people. As informal contact between the Government and the opposition had been recently resumed, politicians hoped for a relaxation of press censorship and of the ban on political activity. In early December, however, President Alvarez strongly condemned the political rallies, and appealed to the 'silent majority' to be alert for signs of 'Marxist subversion' within Uruguay. Public protests continued throughout the month.

In January 1984 a 24-hour general strike, called by the PIT in protest at the announcement of a 28% increase in prices and at political repression, paralysed most of Uruguay. President Alvarez, whose popularity among the armed forces had recently undergone a resurgence (caused by alarm at President Alfonsín's prosecution of former military leaders in Argentina), swiftly banned the PIT and reimposed controls on political dissent. General Pedro Aranco, a firm supporter of the President, was appointed Commander-in-Chief of the Army. Following the general strike, conflict between the Government and the trade unions escalated. The Government banned any reporting of protests or of trade union activity. In February, however, the Government partially lifted press censorship in an attempt to encourage renewed dialogue with the opposition. Civil unrest persisted, and there was mounting public agitation for the release of an imprisoned politician, Gen. Líber Seregni Mosquera, and for the return from exile of Wilson Ferreira Aldunate. In March the Government released Seregni Mosquera and José Luis Massera, a former secretary of the Partido Comunista.

In May 1984 more than 300,000 people participated in an anti-Government demonstration called by opposition groups. In response to increasing political agitation, the Government threatened to postpone the elections, planned for 25 November 1984, unless the political parties agreed to its proposals for constitutional reform. Political tension increased in June, following the return from exile and the subsequent arrest of Wilson Ferreira Aldunate, the proposed presidential candidate of the Partido Nacional. Demonstrations were held in protest at his arrest, and representatives of the Partido Nacional refused to participate in talks with the Government whilst Ferreira Aldunate was detained. In late June a 24-hour civic strike in protest at the eleventh anniversary of military rule received widespread support.

Talks between the Government, the Colorados and the Unión Cívica, a Christian Democratic party, resumed in July. The parties succeeded in obtaining several important concessions from the Government, including the right to engage in political activity. Encouraged by the Government's commitment to the restoration of the democratic process, in August the parties (with the exception of the Blancos) agreed to the Government's proposals, including a transitional set of laws and the formation of the Consejo Nacional de Seguridad (National Security Council). The holding of elections was confirmed by the Government, and all restrictions on political activity were lifted. In addition, the Government undertook to begin the release of political prisoners.

In spite of the Blancos' rejection of the electoral agreement, in October Blanco leaders joined other political leaders in signing the Concertación Nacional Programática (Conapro), which represented a pledge by the parties to co-operate on the consolidation of democracy and the revitalization of the economy following the return to civilian rule.

The November elections took place amidst widespread celebrations. Prior to the declaration of the results, however, violent clashes occurred between opposing groups of supporters. Political tension had been exacerbated by rumours of electoral malpractice and by delays caused by the complex electoral system. The Colorado party, led by Dr Julio María Sanguinetti, secured a narrow victory over the opposition. Although the Blancos confirmed their support for the new Government, major differences separated the two groups, namely the amnesty for political prisoners and the issues of land reform and economic strategy.

In February 1985 the military regime stepped down, one month earlier than originally planned. On leaving office, the armed forces warned that they would not hesitate to stage a coup if the resurgence of left-wing groups threatened to result in chaos. Following his inauguration in March, President Sanguinetti announced plans to form a government of national unity, containing representatives of the other parties. In addition, various outlawed organizations were legalized, including the Partido Comunista. The new administration's most pressing concern was Uruguay's economic recession. The Government planned to establish closer ties with the USA. In March most of Uruguay's remaining political prisoners were released.

Government

Uruguay is a republic comprising 19 departments. Under the 1966 constitution, executive power is held by the President, who is directly elected by universal adult suffrage for a term of five years. The President is assisted by a Vice-President and an appointed Council of Ministers. Legislative power is vested in a bicameral Congress, comprising a Senate and a Chamber of Deputies, also directly elected for five years. The President, the Vice-President, the 30 Senators and the 99 Deputies are elected nationally.

A National Constituent Assembly, to be installed on 1 July 1985, was to draw up a series of constitutional reforms which would be submitted to a plebiscite for ratification.

Defence

In July 1984 the armed forces consisted of 29,800 volunteers between the ages of 18 and 45 who contract for one or two years of service. There was an army of 22,300 men, a navy of 4,500 men and an air force of 3,000 men. There were also paramilitary forces of 1,500 men. Defence expenditure for 1982 was estimated to be 5,445m. new pesos.

Economic Affairs

Agriculture is an important sector of the economy, generating a large proportion of Uruguay's export earnings and accounting for 11.6% of GDP in 1983. Livestock rearing, particularly cattle and sheep, is traditionally Uruguay's major industry. Brazil became the major export market for meat after the EEC ban on meat imports in 1974. Rising prices encouraged ranchers to borrow heavily after 1978, but by 1982 many were in financial difficulty on account of high interest rates and falling meat prices. A reduction in the number of livestock resulted in a substantial decline in meat exports in 1984. In 1983 Uruguay produced an estimated 418,000 metric tons of beef and veal. Low world prices caused a 10% drop in wool production in 1981, after reaching a peak of 80,000 metric tons in 1980. In 1983 Uruguay's exports of raw wool and wool products amounted to US $13.2m., which represented a decline of 34.3% on the figures for 1982. Uruguay's principal crops are wheat, maize, sorghum, sunflower seed, rice, linseed and potatoes. Agricultural production rose by 10.8% in 1980 and fell by about 1.2% in 1981. In 1983 agricultural production rose by 2.1%. The harvest of bread wheat fell from 387,768 tons in 1982 to 316,000 tons in 1983. The estimated rice output for 1983/84 was 337,500 tons, compared with 332,000 in 1982/83. The area of land to be sown was expected to increase from 69,000 ha in 1983 to 75,000 ha in 1984. However, heavy rains were expected to cause a decline in yields from 4.75 tons per ha to 4.5 tons per ha. In 1978 Uruguay and Brazil concluded an agreement on a joint development plan to bring 67,000 sq km under cultivation; the 33,000 sq km in Uruguay will increase its agricultural land area by 20%. In 1981 work began on the India Muerta dam, in the Department of Rocha, which, when completed, will provide irrigation for an area of 7,000 ha. In June 1984 an agricultural trade agreement was signed by Uruguay, Brazil and Argentina, which eliminated custom tariffs and established a free-trade system.

Fishing is being strongly promoted by the Government as an important source of foreign currency earnings. Production rose by nearly 45% in 1978 and by 39% in 1979. The IDB has granted a US $27m. loan to help finance the construction of 18 fishing vessels and the new fishing port at La Palma, and to improve Uruguay's fish-processing capacity. The total catch in 1982 was 123,200 metric tons.

The principal industries are food processing (meat, sugar, milk, fruit, wine), hides and leather, textiles, construction, metallurgy and rubber. Between 1976 and 1980 the sector achieved an average annual growth rate of 5%, owing to investment stimuli and government encouragement of export-oriented industries rather than import substitution. Tariff barriers of up to 600% were in force until 1979. The partial removal of these, combined with an overvalued peso, high peso interest rates and a contraction of the Brazilian and especially the Argentine markets, led to the collapse of 103 companies in 1982. The country's largest employer, the textile company Sudamtex, laid off one-third of its workforce in 1982. The manufacturing sector has been severely affected by Uruguay's economic recession. The sector's contribution to the GDP has declined from 27% in 1979 to 21% in 1983.

A steel plant at Nueva Palmira, with an initial annual capacity of 40,000 metric tons, is planned and will be supplied with electricity from the Salto Grande hydroelectric plant. As petroleum exploration has proved disappointing, development of electric energy is a priority. The Government attempted to limit imports of petroleum to 35% of total imports in 1983, compared with 40% in 1982. In 1981 the 1,800 MW hydroelectric plant at Salto Grande (part Argentine) reached full capacity. The 300 MW Palmar plant (part Brazilian) was nearing completion in 1983 and the output from these two plants should make Uruguay a net exporter of electric energy.

After an average GDP growth rate of 4.8% between 1974 and 1980, the economy entered a period of deep recession in 1981. Uruguay is economically dependent on Brazil and Argentina, the latter absorbing 13% of Uruguay's exports in 1980. In 1981 the depreciation of the Argentine peso halted the inflow of Argentine tourists, previously Uruguay's main source of foreign exchange, and the overvalued Uruguayan peso and tariffs introduced by Argentina and Brazil reduced exports to both countries. GDP contracted by 0.8% in 1981 and by 9.8% in 1982. A further decline in GDP of 4.7% was recorded in 1983. The Falklands War in 1982 disrupted trade and reduced shipping in the area, causing stockpiling in the warehouses and therefore reduced production. Foreign exchange reserves fell from US $354m. in December 1981 to $80m. in September 1982. After a further decline to $50m. in March 1983, reserves increased to $201m. by September 1984.

After encouraging business interests to take out dollar loans in 1982, the Government broke its previous commitments to the contrary and 'floated' the peso in November. The peso's value fell sharply, causing price rises and increased foreign debt service payments. In 1984 real wages were estimated to have fallen by 43% since 1973 and unemployment affected over 20% of the labour force. Inflation was estimated to be 63.4% in the year to August 1984.

The banking sector experienced considerable difficulties as a result of the scarcity of foreign credit, falling deposits and an increase in bad debts. In April 1983 the IMF approved a $410m. credit for two years to complement a $950m. debt and new loan rescue package provided by 75 creditor banks. Conditions for the IMF loan included a reduction of the deficit on the current account of the balance of payments to $100m., from $900m. in 1982, and a cut in the budget deficit to 3.5% of GDP, from 8.6% in 1982. The Uruguayan Government was relying upon agricultural goods to ensure an export-led recovery of the economy. In 1983 Uruguay recorded a trade surplus of $309m., the first since 1976. Exports increased to $1,010m. and imports fell to $706m., a decrease which was principally attributable to a 37% reduction in oil imports. The availability of goods and services fell by 14% in 1983.

The new civilian Government, which took office in March 1985, inherited a severe economic crisis. In November 1984 Uruguay's foreign debt was estimated to be $5,500m. In 1984, 80% of businesses were thought to be operating in critical financial conditions; the sector's debts amounted to $1,500m. Dr Julio María Sanguinetti, Uruguay's new President, has affirmed his Government's intention to renegotiate the foreign debt in 1985 with the assistance of the IMF.

Uruguay is a member of ALADI (see p. 171), SELA (p. 218), OAS (p. 191) and IDB (p. 156).

Transport and Communications

The easy nature of the terrain and the small area of the country make for rapid communications within Uruguay and with neighbouring Argentina and Brazil. The new Paysandú–Colón and Fray-Bentos–Puerto Unzué road bridges have further improved communications with Argentina. The total length of roads in 1981 was 49,813 km, of which 90% were usable in all weathers. The railways are state-owned and there were 3,001 km of track in 1984. A line from Concordia to Salto, linking the Uruguayan and Argentine rail networks, was completed in 1981. Inland waterways are an important means of transport and cargo and passenger services operate on the rivers Plate and Uruguay, which are navigable for 560 km. International air services are provided by the national airline, PLUNA, and a number of foreign airlines. The main airport is at Carrasco, 21 km from Montevideo, and there are seven other airports.

Social Welfare

Uruguay is noted for its advanced scheme of social welfare, which covers professional accidents, industrial diseases, sickness, old age, maternity and child welfare. Employment guarantees are in force and government subsidies are available for workers. The social welfare system is financed by contributions from workers, employers and the State. The pension age is low (30 years' service, sometimes less); social charges faced by companies, however, are high (reaching 77.5% for the construction industry and more than 100% in the wool industry and ports). There are also laws governing the protection of minors and women in employment, insurance against suspension from work, annual licences, redundancy payments, etc. Grants for families are provided by the Family Subsidies Fund. In 1976 Uruguay had 64 government-run hospitals, with 11,946 beds, and in 1979 there were 5,400 physicians.

Education

All education, including university education, is free, and primary and the first stage of secondary schooling are compulsory. The programmes of instruction are the same in both public and private schools, and private schools are subject to certain state controls. In 1978 illiteracy averaged 2.6% for those between 10 and 44 years of age. There is one university.

Tourism

The sandy beaches and tropical swamps on the coast and the forests of the interior, with their variety of wild life and vegetation, provide the main tourist attractions. Uruguay received more than 729,000 visitors in 1983.

Public Holidays

1985: 1 May (Labour Day), 18 May (Battle of Las Piedras), 19 June (Birth of General Artigas), 18 July (Constitution Day), 25 August (National Independence Day), 12 October (Discovery of America), 2 November (All Souls' Day), 8 December (Blessing of the Waters), 25 December (Christmas Day).

1986: 1 January (New Year's Day), 6 January (Epiphany), 19 April (Landing of the 33 Patriots).

Many business firms close during Carnival week (10–15 February 1986) and Tourist week (Easter).

Weights and Measures

The metric system is in force.

Directory

The Constitution

The present Constitution of Uruguay was ratified by plebiscite on 27 November 1966, when the country voted to return to the presidential form of government after 15 years of 'collegiate' government. The main points of the Constitution are as follows:

General Provisions

Uruguay shall have a democratic republican form of government, sovereignty being exercised directly by the Electoral Body in cases of election, by initiative or by referendum, and indirectly by representative powers established by the Constitution, according to the rules set out therein.

There shall be freedom of religion; there is no state religion; property shall be inviolable; there shall be freedom of thought. Anyone may enter Uruguay. There are two forms of citizenship: natural, being persons born in Uruguay or of Uruguayan parents, and legal, being people established in Uruguay with at least three years' residence in the case of those with family, and five years' for those without family. Every citizen has the right and obligation to vote.

Legislature

Legislative power is vested in the Congress (General Assembly), made up of two houses, which may act separately or together according to the dispositions of the Constitution. It elects in joint session the members of the Supreme Court of Justice, of the Electoral Court, Tribunals, Administrative Litigation and the Accounts Tribunal.

Elections for both houses, the President and the Vice-President and the departmental governments shall take place every five years on the last Sunday in November; sessions of the Assembly begin on 15 March each year and last until 15 December (15 October in election years, in which case the new Assembly takes office on 15 February). Extraordinary sessions can be called only in case of extreme urgency.

Chamber of Representatives

The Chamber of Representatives has 99 members elected by direct suffrage by the people according to the system of proportional representation, with at least two representatives to each Department. The number of representatives can be altered by law by a two-thirds majority in both houses. Their term of office is five years and they must be over 25 and natural citizens or legal citizens with five years' exercise of their citizenship. The members have the right to bring accusations against any member of the Government or judiciary for violation of the Constitution or any other serious offence.

Senate

The Senate is made up of 30 members, elected directly by the people by proportional representation on the same lists as the representatives, for a term of five years. They must be natural citizens or legal citizens with seven years' exercise of their rights, and be over 30 years of age. The Senate is responsible for hearing any cases brought by the representatives and can deprive a guilty person of his post by a two-thirds majority.

The Executive

Executive power is exercised by the President and the Council of Ministers. There shall be a Vice-President, who shall also be President of the Congress and of the Senate. The President and Vice-President are elected by simple majority of the people by means of the system of double simultaneous vote, and remain in office for five years. They must be over 35 and natural citizens of Uruguay.

The Council of Ministers is made up of the office holders in the 11 ministries or their deputies, and is responsible for all acts of government and administration. It is presided over by the President of the Republic who has a vote.

The Judiciary

Judicial Power shall be exercised by the Supreme Court of five members and by Tribunals and local courts; members of the Supreme Court must be over 40, natural citizens, or legal citizens with 10 years' exercise and 25 years' residence, and must be lawyers of 10 years' standing, eight of them in public or fiscal ministry or judicature. Members serve for 10 years and can be re-elected after a break of five years. The Court nominates all other judges and judicial officials.

CONSEJO NACIONAL DE SEGURIDAD
(National Security Council)

Temporary regulations, appended to the 1966 constitution in August 1984, stipulated that, following the transfer of power to a new civilian government in March 1985, the Consejo Nacional de Seguridad would be composed of nine members, including the Ministers of the Interior, Foreign Affairs and National Defence and the three Commanders-in-Chief of the armed forces. The Council would convene by presidential request and would act as an advisory body to the President.

Political Organizations

The names of the two principal parties derive from the flags of the civil war of 1836, namely Blanco and Colorado. By tradition the Blanco Party is conservative and the Colorado Party more liberal.

Frente Amplio: Coalition led by Gen. Líber Seregni Mosquera and consisting of the following parties:

Partido Demócrata Cristiano (PDC): formerly Unión Cívica del Uruguay; f. 1962; Pres. Juan Guillermo Young.

Partido Comunista: Leaders Enrique Rodríguez, Alberto Altesor; Sec.-Gen. Rodney Arismendi.

Partido Socialista: Sec.-Gen. José Pedro Cardozo.

Movimiento 26 de Marzo: Supports the ideology of the former Tupamaro guerrilla movement.

Partido Colorado: Vásquez 1271, Montevideo; tel. 490180; f. 1836; Sec.-Gen. Enrique E. Tarigo; comprises five groups:

Judicial System

The Court of Justice is made up of five members appointed at the suggestion of the executive, for a period of five years. It has original jurisdiction in constitutional, international and admiralty cases, and hears appeals from the appellate courts, of which there are seven, each with three judges.

Cases involving the functioning of the State administration are heard in the ordinary Administrative Courts, and in the Supreme Administrative Court which consists of five members appointed in the same way as members of the Court of Justice.

In Montevideo there are 19 civil courts, 10 criminal and correctional courts, 19 courts presided over by justices of the peace, three juvenile courts, three labour courts and courts for government and other cases. Each departmental capital, and some other cities, has a departmental court; each of the 224 judicial divisions has a justice of the peace.

The administration of justice became free of charge in 1980 with the placing of attorneys-at-law in all courts to assist those unable to pay for the services of a lawyer.

Finance

BANKING

A law passed in 1965 prevented the establishment of new banks, and there has consequently been a rise in secondary banking, with many foreign banks opening offices since 1977. A new law was approved in September 1982, which restored the right to establish new banks.

TRADE UNIONS

All trade union activity was under strict control between 1973 and 1985. In June 1973 the central organization (Confederación Nacional de Trabajadores), which claimed some 400,000 members, was declared illegal. In December 1979 a new labour law was submitted to the Council of State allowing three levels of association and optional union membership. A further law, introduced in October 1981, allows for the holding of secret ballots to elect union officials, and the establishment of company unions (sindicatos por empresa) in firms with 15 or more employees.

VANUATU

Introductory Survey

Location, Climate, Language, Religion, Flag, Capital

The Republic of Vanuatu comprises an irregular archipelago of about 80 islands in the south-west Pacific Ocean, lying about 1,000 km (600 miles) west of Fiji and 400 km (250 miles) north-east of New Caledonia. The group extends over a distance of about 900 km (560 miles) from north to south. The islands have an oceanic tropical climate, with a season of south-east trade winds between May and October. Winds are variable, with occasional cyclones for the rest of the year, and annual rainfall varies between 2,300 mm (90 in) in the south and 3,900 mm (154 in) in the north. At Port Vila, in the centre of the group, mean temperatures vary between 22° (72°F) and 27°C (81°F). The national language is Bislama, ni-Vanuatu pidgin. There are many Melanesian languages and dialects. English, French and Bislama are the official languages. Most of the inhabitants profess Christianity, of which a number of denominations are represented. The national flag consists of two horizontal stripes, red above green, on which are superimposed a black-edged yellow horizontal 'Y' (with its base in the fly) and, at the hoist, a black triangle containing two crossed green leaves on a curled yellow boar's tusk. The capital is Port Vila, on the island of Efate.

Recent History

During the 19th century the New Hebrides (now Vanuatu) were settled by British and French missionaries, planters and traders. The United Kingdom and France established a Joint Naval Commission for the islands in 1887. The two countries later agreed on a joint civil administration, and in 1906 the territory became the Anglo-French Condominium of the New Hebrides (Nouvelles-Hébrides). Under this arrangement, there were three elements in the structure of administration: the British National Service, the French National Service and the Condominium (Joint) Departments. Each power was responsible for its own citizens and other non-New Hebrideans who chose to be 'ressortissants' of either power. Indigenous New Hebrideans were not permitted to claim either British or French citizenship. The result of this was two official languages, two police forces, three public services, three courts of law, three currencies, three national budgets, two resident commissioners in Port Vila, the capital, and two district commissioners in each of the four Districts.

Local political initiatives began after the Second World War and originated in New Hebridean concern over the alienation of native land. More than 36% of the New Hebrides was owned by foreigners. Na-Griamel, one of the first political groups to emerge, had its source in cult-like activities. In 1971 the leaders of Na-Griamel petitioned the United Nations to prevent further sales of land at a time when areas were being sold to US interests for development as tropical tourist resorts. In 1972 the New Hebrides National Party was formed, with support from Protestant missions and covert support from British interests. In response, French interests formed the Union des Communautés Néo-Hébridaises in 1974. Discussions in London in 1974 resulted in the replacement of the Advisory Council, set up in 1957, by a Representative Assembly of 42 members, of whom 29 were directly elected in November 1975. The Assembly did not hold its first full working session until November 1976, and it was dissolved in early 1977, following a boycott by the National Party, which had changed its name to the Vanuaaku Party (VP) in 1976. However, the VP reached an agreement with the Condominium powers on new elections for the Representative Assembly, based on universal suffrage for all seats.

In July 1977 it was announced, at a conference in Paris between British, French and New Hebrides representatives, that the islands would become independent in 1980, following a referendum and elections. The VP boycotted this conference, as it demanded immediate independence. The VP also boycotted the elections in November and declared a 'People's Provisional Government'. Nevertheless, a reduced Assembly of 39 members was elected, and a measure of self-government was introduced early in 1978. A Council of Ministers and the office of Chief Minister (occupied by Georges Kalsakau) were created, and the French, British and Condominium Services began to be replaced by a single New Hebrides Public Service. The VP declined to participate in the new Government at first, but in December 1978 a Government of National Unity was formed, with Father Gérard Leymang (hitherto Minister of Social Services, Health and Works) as Chief Minister, while the President of the VP, Father Walter Lini, became Deputy Chief Minister.

In September 1979 a conference was held to adopt a constitution, and independence was finally scheduled for July 1980. At fresh elections, in November 1979, the VP won 26 of the 39 seats in the Assembly. The outcome of the election led to rioting by supporters of Na-Griamel on the island of Espiritu Santo, who threatened non-Santo 'foreigners'. However, the new Assembly elected Father Lini to be Chief Minister.

In June 1980 Jimmy Stevens, the leader of Na-Griamel, declared Santo independent of the rest of the New Hebrides, styling it the 'Independent State of Vemarana'. Members of his movement, armed with bows and arrows and allegedly assisted by French colons and backed by private US business interests, moved to the coast and imprisoned government officers and police, who were later released and allowed to leave the island, together with other European and indigenous public servants. In mid-June about 200 British Royal Marines arrived, in the capacity of a peace-keeping force, a development which was strongly criticized by the French, who would not permit Britain's unilateral use of force on Espiritu Santo.

In mid-July, however, agreement was reached between the two Condominium powers and Walter Lini, and the New Hebrides became independent within the Commonwealth, under the name of Vanuatu, as planned, on 30 July 1980. The first President was the former Deputy Chief Minister, George Kalkoa, who adopted the surname Sokomanu ('leader of thousands'), although the post is a largely ceremonial one. Father Lini became Prime Minister. Shortly after independence, the Republic of Vanuatu signed a defence pact with Papua New Guinea, and in August units of the Papua New Guinea Defence Force replaced the British and French troops on Santo and arrested the rebels.

In February 1981 the French ambassador to Vanuatu was expelled, following the deportation from New Caledonia of the VP secretary-general, who was due to attend an assembly of the New Caledonian Independence Front. France immediately withdrew aid to Vanuatu but, after relations between the countries improved in March, a $ A6.9m. aid agreement was signed and a new ambassador appointed. In June 1982 Vanuatu laid claim to the small, uninhabited islands of Matthew and Hunter, lying about 200 km (120 miles) south-east of Vanuatu's southern island of Aneityum, thus greatly increasing the size of the country's exclusive economic zone, although France disputed the claim.

At a general election in November 1983, the VP retained a comfortable, though reduced, majority in Parliament, taking 24 of the 39 seats. George Sokomanu resigned as President in February 1984, after pleading guilty in court to the late payment of road taxes, but was re-elected in March. In December 1984 the Vanuatu Government cancelled a visit by the French Minister for Co-operation and Development, Christian Nucci, because the French Government was ignoring its undertaking, by an earlier agreement, to pay one-third of the claims for damages arising from the rebellion of 1980, matching contributions by the Governments of the UK and Vanuatu. The total value of private claims allowed was US $4.5m. but, when compensation was paid in August 1984, private claimants were paid only two-thirds of each claim, to take account of the dispute with France.

Government

Vanuatu is a republic. Legislative power is vested in a unicameral Parliament, with 39 members who are elected by universal adult suffrage for four years. The Head of State is the President, elected for a five-year term by an electoral college consisting of Parliament and the Presidents of the Regional Councils. Executive power is vested in the Council of Ministers, appointed by the Prime Minister and responsible to Parliament. The Prime Minister is elected by and from members of Parliament.

Economic Affairs

Much of the land is mountainous and covered with natural forest, so cultivation is generally restricted to coastal plains and the low plateaux. About 80% of the population live in rural areas and practise subsistence gardening, the main crops being coconuts, yams, taro, cassava, breadfruit and vegetables.

Copra, fish and beef are Vanuatu's main export commodities. In 1984 work began on a cocoa plantation of 1,700 ha on Malekula Island, but operations were suspended in February 1985, because the company developing the project considered that government legislation to impose minimum wage rates for the country's workers would render the venture uncompetitive in world markets. An active and successful forestry development programme is now under way, with particular emphasis on South American hardwoods, and cattle farming is expanding rapidly, about 800 tons of beef being exported annually, mainly from the abattoir on the island of Espiritu Santo.

Fishing is one of the mainstays of Vanuatu's economy. The South Pacific Fishing Company, a Japanese-controlled operation, receives tuna from about 50 vessels for freezing at its storage base on Santo. Manufacturing is based on the processing of the nation's primary products, but the Government is also promoting a number of small-scale import-substitution industries. Food and drink, manufactured goods and fuels are the main imports, while the principal overall trading partners are Australia, France and Japan.

Vanuatu's first Five-Year Development Plan (1982–86), with a budget of 11,000m. vatu, aims at self-sufficiency for the economy within 10–15 years. Regional specialization is planned, with priority to be given to cocoa in the north, forestry and cattle in the central islands and coffee in the south. Industrial centres are to be expanded in Port Vila and on the islands of Tanna and Espiritu Santo. Following the abolition of foreign-owned freehold title, upon the country's independence in 1980, a Land Leasing Act of April 1983 provided for secure leases of land from traditional owners and was expected to encourage many new projects.

Tourism is an important sector of the economy, and was expected to benefit from the formation of Air Vanuatu, the nation's small international airline, in 1981. Domestic tax revenue is derived mainly from import duties. In 1979 the estimated 'invisible' export earnings from the use, by about 500 overseas companies, of the 'tax haven' facility reached 450m. vatu, thus making it the fourth largest source of foreign exchange. In Port Vila a financial centre has developed within the framework of British company law, and a shipping register was established in 1981, offering a 'flag of convenience'.

Vanuatu's economy grew by nearly 4% in 1983, largely as a result of a rise in copra earnings, and the trade deficit fell from 3,633m. vatu in 1982 to 3,415m. vatu in 1983. The vatu was revalued by 5.5% in March 1984.

Transport and Communications

Roads on the islands are generally unsealed but there are 35 km of sealed roads, mostly on Efate Island. An internal airline provides a regular service to 21 small airfields, while small shipping vessels provide a frequent, but mostly unscheduled, inter-island service. External services operate through Port Vila and Santo, each of which has an international airfield and a deep-water port. There is a 24-hour telex, telegram and telephone service. Port Vila and Luganville are linked by VHF telephone, and this service is being extended to all the other islands.

Social Welfare

Medical care is provided through a network of hospitals, health centres, clinics and dispensaries. The Government does not provide a free medical service, and patients still pay a nominal fee. In 1983 the islands had eight hospitals and 32 health centres. There were 700 beds in government hospitals in 1977, and 28 physicians in 1983.

Education

Education is provided by the Government for a nominal fee, but is not compulsory. Primary education begins at six years of age and lasts for six years. Secondary education, beginning at the age of 12, lasts for up to seven years. The principal languages of instruction are English and French. In 1982 there were 282 primary schools and, in 1981, 10 secondary schools. There is one technical training facility in the capital. Students undergo higher education at the University of the South Pacific, in Fiji, at a university in Papua New Guinea, or in France. Vanuatu has one teacher-training college.

Tourism

Tourism is an increasingly important foreign exchange earner. There were 32,374 visitors to Vanuatu in 1983, and passengers on cruise-ships calling at the islands numbered 65,300. In 1984 there were 11 hotels in Port Vila and South Efate, offering a total of 444 rooms. There are limited tourist facilities outside the capital.

The Constitution

A new Constitution came into effect at independence on 30 July 1980. The main provisions are as follows:

The Republic of Vanuatu is a sovereign democratic state, of which the Constitution is the supreme law. Bislama is the national language and the official languages are Bislama, English and French. The Constitution guarantees protection of all fundamental rights and freedoms and provides for the determination of citizenship.

The President, as head of the Republic, symbolizes the unity of the Republic and is elected for a five-year term of office by secret ballot by an electoral college consisting of Parliament and the Presidents of the Regional Councils.

Legislative power resides in the single-chamber Parliament consisting of 39 members elected for four years on the basis of universal franchise through an electoral system which includes an element of proportional representation to ensure fair representation of different political groups and opinions. Parliament is presided over by a Speaker elected by the members. Executive power is vested in the Council of Ministers which consists of the Prime Minister (elected by Parliament from among its members) and other Ministers (appointed by the Prime Minister from among the members of Parliament). The number of Ministers, including the Prime Minister, may not exceed a quarter of the number of members of Parliament.

Special attention is paid to custom law and to decentralization. The Constitution states that all land in the Republic belongs to the indigenous custom owners and their descendants. There is a National Council of Chiefs, composed of custom chiefs elected by their peers sitting in District Councils of Chiefs. It may discuss all matters relating to custom and tradition and may make recommendations to Parliament for the preservation and promotion of the culture and languages of Vanuatu. The Council may be consulted on any question in connection with any bill before Parliament. Each region may elect a regional council and the Constitution lays particular emphasis on the representation of custom chiefs within each one.

The Constitution also makes provision for public finance, the Public Service, the Ombudsman, a leadership code and the judiciary (see Judicial System).

Judicial System

The Supreme Court has unlimited jurisdiction to hear and determine any civil or criminal proceedings. It consists of a Chief Justice, appointed by the President of the Republic after consultation with the Prime Minister and the leader of the opposition, and three other judges from other Pacific countries, who are qualified to practise as lawyers in Vanuatu and are appointed by the President of the Republic on the advice of the Judicial Service Commission.

The Court of Appeal is constituted by two or more judges of the Supreme Court sitting together. The Supreme Court comprises the Chief Justice and two other judges when it considers an application made by any person who considers that a provision of the Constitution has been infringed.

Magistrates' Courts have limited jurisdiction to hear and determine any civil or criminal proceedings. Island Courts have been established in several Local Government Regions, and are constituted when three justices are sitting together to exercise civil or criminal jurisdiction, as defined in the warrant establishing the court.

CO-OPERATIVES

There are more than 300 co-operative primary societies in Vanuatu and at least 85% of the distribution of goods in the islands is done by co-operative organizations. Almost all rural ni-Vanuatu are members of a co-operative society (through family membership), as are many urban dwellers also.

Co-operative Federation: Port Vila; the main supervisory society; handles 75% of consumer goods distribution in the outer islands; also operates a main shipping service and a savings bank.

TRADE UNIONS

The country's first trade union was formed in March 1984. By June 1984 seven trade unions had been registered, including the following:

Oil and Gas Workers' Union: Port Vila; f. 1984.

Vanuatu Airline Workers' Union: Port Vila; f. 1984.

Transport

ROADS

In 1980 there were about 1,000 km of roads, 35 km of which were sealed.

SHIPPING

The principal ports are Port Vila and Santo.

Vanua Navigation SARL: Port Vila; f. 1977 by the Co-operative Federation and Sofrana Unilines.

The following services call regularly at Vanuatu: Compagnie Générale Maritime, Daiwa Line and Pacific Navigation of Tonga from Sydney and other Pacific Islands; China Navigation Co from Australia, Hong Kong, Taiwan and Singapore; Kyowa Shipping Co from Hong Kong, Japan and the Republic of Korea; Pacific Forum Line from New Zealand; Papua New Guinea Shipping Corporation from Australia, Papua New Guinea and Solomon Islands; Sofrana-Unilines from New Zealand, and from New Caledonia and Solomon Islands; Bank Line from the United Kingdom, the Netherlands and the Federal Republic of Germany. Royal Viking Line and P & O cruises also call at Vanuatu.

VENEZUELA

Introductory Survey

Location, Climate, Language, Religion, Flag, Capital

The Republic of Venezuela lies on the north coast of South America, bordered by Colombia to the west, Guyana to the east and Brazil to the south. The climate varies with altitude from tropical to temperate, the average temperature in Caracas being 21°C (69°F). The language is Spanish. There is no state religion, but most of the population is Roman Catholic. The national flag (proportions 3 by 2) has three horizontal stripes of yellow, blue and red, with seven five-pointed white stars, arranged in a semi-circle, in the centre of the blue stripe. The state flag has, in addition, the national coat of arms in the top left-hand corner. The capital is Caracas.

Recent History

Venezuela was a Spanish colony from 1499 until 1821 and, under the leadership of Simón Bolívar, achieved independence in 1830. The country was governed principally by dictators until 1945, when a military-civilian coup replaced Isaías Medina Angarita by Rómulo Betancourt as head of a revolutionary junta. Colonel (later Gen.) Marcos Pérez Jiménez seized power in December 1952 and took office as President in 1953. He remained in office until 1958, when he was overthrown by a military junta under Adm. Wolfgang Larrazábal. Rómulo Betancourt was elected President in the same year.

The Constitution now in force was promulgated in 1961. Three years later President Betancourt became the first Venezuelan President to complete his term of office. Dr Raúl Leoni was elected President in December 1963. Supporters of ex-President Pérez staged an abortive military uprising in 1966. Dr Rafael Caldera Rodríguez became Venezuela's first Christian Democratic President in March 1969. He succeeded in stabilizing the country politically and economically, although political assassinations and abductions committed by underground organizations continued into 1974. At elections in December 1973 Carlos Andrés Rodríguez, candidate of Acción Democrática (AD), the main opposition party, was chosen as successor to President Caldera. The Government's policy was to invest heavily in agriculture and industrial development to create a more balanced economy, and to nationalize important sectors. The presidential elections of December 1978 were won by the leader of the Partido Social-Cristiano (COPEI), Dr Luis Herrera Campíns, who took office in March 1979. As his party did not obtain an overall majority in the Congress at the simultaneous general elections, President Herrera Campíns sought an alliance with the smaller parties, particularly the Unión Republicana Democrática, in order to pass legislation.

In 1981 the deteriorating economic situation sparked off social unrest and a wave of guerrilla attacks. In 1982 the left-wing parties under the Nueva Alternativa joined forces in preparation for presidential elections in 1983, in which José Vicente Rangel was to be their candidate. Dr Rafael Caldera and Dr Jaime Lusinchi were announced as the candidates for the COPEI and AD parties respectively. Twenty political parties and 13 presidential candidates participated in the election campaign, which commenced in April 1983. The campaign was notable principally for the vitriolic nature of the confrontations between candidates. Dr Jaime Lusinchi emerged as the likely victor, as he had succeeded in attracting the support of middle-class voters who blamed the dramatic decline in their standard of living on President Herrera Campíns' mismanagement of the economy. In the presidential election of December 1983, Dr Lusinchi was elected with 56.8% of the votes. The AD won the majority of seats in Congress. On taking power in February, the President announced that the Government would launch a 'national crusade' against corruption, and reaffirmed his administration's opposition to any foreign intervention in Central America. In May 1984 the ruling party's dominance of the political scene was emphasized by its decisive victory in the municipal elections. However, President Lusinchi's personal popularity was thought to be waning, principally as a result of his Government's stringent economic policies. In March 1985 the Council of Ministers resigned to enable the President to implement ministerial changes.

In 1982 Venezuela refused to renew the 1970 Port of Spain Protocol, declaring a 12-year moratorium on the issue of Venezuela's claim to a large area of Guyana to the west of the Essequibo river, which expired in June. Venezuela's border garrisons were strengthened and border violations were reported. In September Venezuela rejected Guyana's proposal to submit the dispute to the International Court of Justice. In accordance with President Lusinchi's stated intention of giving priority to settling Venezuela's border disputes, in March 1985 it was announced that Venezuela and Guyana had requested UN mediation in an attempt to resolve their dispute over the Essequibo region. Venezuela also has a claim to some islands in the Netherlands Antilles, which reported several airspace violations by Venezuelan aircraft in 1982. Venezuela has a territorial dispute with Colombia over maritime boundaries in the Gulf of Venezuela. Relations with Nicaragua deteriorated in 1982 and three Venezuelan diplomats were expelled from Managua, accused of attempting to destabilize the regime. It was also reported that Venezuelan officers were training government troops in El Salvador. Venezuela was one of Argentina's staunchest supporters during the 1982 Falklands War and, as a consequence, relations with the USA were placed under strain. Under President Lusinchi, Venezuela is committed to improving relations with Caribbean countries. Venezuela has observer status in the Non-Aligned Movement.

Government

Venezuela is a federal republic comprising 20 states, two Federal Territories and a Federal District (containing the capital). Under the 1961 Constitution, legislative power is held by the bicameral National Congress, with a Senate (44 elected members plus ex-Presidents of the Republic) and a Chamber of Deputies (199 members). Executive authority rests with the President. Senators, Deputies and the President are all elected for five years by universal adult suffrage. The President has wide powers and appoints a Council of Ministers to assist him. Each state has an executive Governor, appointed by the President, and an elected legislature.

Defence

Military service is selective for 18 months between the ages of 18 and 45. In July 1984 the armed forces numbered 44,250 men: an army of 27,500, a navy of 12,000 men (including 4,250 marines) and an air force of 4,750 men. There were paramilitary forces of 20,000 men. Defence expenditure for 1983 was estimated to be 5,100m. bolívares.

Economic Affairs

Venezuela's most important economic activity is petroleum production, which accounts for 95% of export earnings. In 1982 Petróleos de Venezuela (PDVSA) was the largest company in Latin America and Venezuela was OPEC's second largest exporter. Proven reserves amount to 55,000m. barrels. After nationalization in 1976, investment increased tenfold. Earnings from the industry rose from US $18,800m. in 1980 to $19,700m. in 1981. An average of 2.1m. b/d was produced in 1982 in compliance with the OPEC 'ceiling'. Several price cuts in early 1982 reduced revenue and caused a budget crisis. The Government postponed a $150,000m. plan to expand and modernize the oil industry. The development of the Orinoco tar belt (semi-proven reserves 70,000m. barrels) has been delayed through lack of funds. However, the Orinoco belt is expected to produce an average of 170,000 b/d of heavy crude petroleum in 1985. In August 1983 PDVSA announced a $502m. development project for the region. After agreeing to an OPEC limit of 1.5m. b/d in March 1982, fear of a 30% decline in revenue forced the Government to 'break ranks' and increase production to 2.2m. b/d by November, to raise receipts for the year from a projected $14,000m. to $17,800m. However, in March 1983 OPEC announced a 15% reduction in prices and production, which the Venezuelan Government expected to lead to a 17% fall in revenue from oil exports for 1983. Revenue from the industry was $14,900m. in 1983. In January 1985 the Government announced plans to reduce production from 1.56m. b/d to 1.44m. b/d, in accordance with the new OPEC limit established in October 1984. Income generated in 1985 was expected to amount to $13,900m. The Amuay refinery on the Paraguana peninsula, with a planned capacity of 630,000 b/d, was inaugurated in February 1983. Initial production was to be 450,000 b/d.

Industrial diversification, to reduce dependence on petroleum, is a high government priority. The annual growth in manufacturing output was 3.9% in 1984, following a decline of 1.6% in 1983. The construction industry grew by 2.8% in 1981, after falling by 15.5% in 1980. The construction industry experienced a decline in productivity of 9% in 1983. The main development area is Ciudad Guayana, encompassing a steel complex, two aluminium plants, a tractor factory, bauxite and gold mining and a timber reserve. The first stage of the 9,000 MW Guri project, on the Caroni river, was completed in 1982. It provides 40% of domestic energy requirements. Total hydroelectricity potential is about 45,000 MW, and it is hoped to replace oil as the main source of energy. Gas exploration is under way. By December 1983 Venezuela's reserves of gas were confirmed at 1,536,293m. cu m.

Aluminium has replaced iron ore as the second export industry. However, in 1982 low world prices and falling export demand caused the industry to decline. Output fell by 12.8% to 274,000 metric tons, and exports fell by 14.5% in volume to 205,000 tons. The 1m. metric ton Interalúmina plant began operations in March 1983. Interalúmina planned to export 200,000 tons of alumina in 1984. Recent discoveries of 500m. tons of bauxite mean that Venezuelan aluminium plants can be supplied entirely with local bauxite. In 1984 the Government announced plans to mine up to 4.4m. metric tons annually of high-grade bauxite at the Los Pijiguas zone in Bolívar state. Open-cast mining operations were due to commence in mid-1986 and full production was planned in 1990. Venezuela is also rich in diamonds, gold, zinc, copper, lead, silver, phosphates, manganese and titanium, and efforts are being made to exploit these resources fully. Gold production amounted to more than 1m. grams in 1983. Production of steel rose by 6.4% in 1982 to 1.75m. tons. Production of iron ore fell by 28% to 11.2m. tons in 1982. Exports fell by 5.9m. tons, to 6.5m. tons, because of a collapse in sales to the USA. Production of fertilizers increased by 39% in 1980, when the plant at Puerto Morón reached full capacity.

Agriculture employed 16.7% of the labour force in 1982 and accounted for 6.3% of the GDP in 1983. The sector is not sufficiently productive to meet the country's food requirements. Only 5% of arable land is used and three-quarters of that is devoted to pasture. The chief crops are sugar cane, bananas, maize, rice, coffee, cocoa and cotton, and in 1981 there were record yields of sorghum, beans and groundnuts. A major share of oil revenues since 1974 has been spent on agriculture, and in 1980 production increased by 6%, compared with only 3.7% in 1979. In 1981, however, torrential rains and flooding severely affected some 20% of total cultivated land and production fell by 2.8%. Improved weather conditions in 1982 resulted in an increase in output, although it was still necessary for Venezuela to import 51% of its total food requirements. In 1983 the IDB granted a loan of US $30m. to the agricultural sector for technological purposes.

The average growth in GDP between 1974 and 1977 was 7.2% annually. The rate fell to 3.2% in 1978 and 0.9% in 1979. Government austerity measures reduced inflation from 23% in 1980 to 16% in 1981. GDP fell by 1.2% in 1980, but grew by 0.3% in 1981. Hopes for reflation in 1982 were dashed by a decline in oil receipts, which account for 70% of government revenue. The $20,000m. budget for 1982 was cut by 20% in April and a budget deficit was predicted, which would increase the foreign borrowing requirement. The foreign debt grew by an average of 52% per year between 1976 and 1981 and was estimated at $18,520m. in June 1982, 47% of which was short-term. Failure to agree on terms for refinancing with foreign bankers prevented the conversion of $3,000m. of short-term into medium- and long-term debt by the end of the year. Confidence was shaken by payment defaults by state agencies and private companies, as well as by the Government's intervention in the largest bank, the Banco de los Trabajadores. Foreign exchange reserves fell from $7,081m. to $3,348m. in the first nine months of 1982. In order to increase foreign bankers' confidence, the Government appropriated $6,000m. from the oil industry's foreign reserves in September in order to revalue total reserves at $17,000m. A current account surplus of $4,000m. in 1981 became a $3,000m. deficit in 1982, representing 4% of GDP. A trade surplus of $7,700m. in 1981 was estimated to have fallen to $1,500m. in 1982. Public spending was cut by 30% and domestic fuel prices rose by 100%, as the Government attempted to tackle the worsening economic situation. After lifting food subsidies, the Government introduced a system of food distribution to poor families in September 1982, to the value of 100 bolívares per person per month.

The Venezuelan economy continued to decline in 1983, chiefly as a result of the deterioration in the world oil market. Loss of confidence in the economy and speculation regarding an imminent devaluation of the bolívar caused a dramatic increase in capital flight of up to US $100m. per day during February and March. International reserves declined by $1,300m. to $8,700m. in the first quarter of 1983. In March the Government introduced a three-tier exchange rate system incorporating a de facto 28.7% devaluation of the bolívar. In an attempt to check capital flight and reduce imports by 25% in 1983, the Government announced import controls on over 400 items.

In June the Government confirmed that it would seek a loan of $2,800m. from the IMF and that it would renegotiate $18,400m. of public sector foreign debt with creditor banks. However, the creditor banks' condition that Venezuela should adopt an economic stabilization programme, devised by the IMF, precluded any agreement between the parties, as Venezuela consistently refused to accept the IMF's recommendations of a devaluation of the bolívar and strict fiscal and monetary controls. The delay in agreement was exacerbated by the long-standing feud between the Banco Central de Venezuela and the Ministry of Finance. By November Venezuela had secured its fifth moratorium on debt repayments for 1983 and had accumulated interest arrears of $400m. on its $35,000m. foreign debt.

In February 1984 the new Government, under President Lusinchi, announced a series of economic measures, including more flexible price controls, a realignment of the currency exchange system, an increase in domestic fuel prices of 20%, a relaxation of restrictive foreign investment regulations and the creation of 200,000 jobs in 1984. The Government also announced a de facto devaluation of the bolívar by 78%. Government spending was to be reduced by 10%. In March President Lusinchi was granted special powers by Congress to enable him to introduce austerity measures and reforms to reactivate the private sector. In July the Government began talks with its creditor banks in an attempt to renegotiate the public sector debt, amounting to $27,000m. The Government maintained its intention to solve Venezuela's economic difficulties without assistance from the IMF. In September agreement was reached in principle on the rescheduling of $20,750m. of public sector debt, to be repaid over a period of 12½ years. However, the accord was delayed by Venezuela's failure to resolve the issue of outstanding interest payments on the private sector debt of $8,000m. The Government hoped to conclude the agreement with its creditor banks by mid-1985.

In 1984 Venezuela's GNP declined by 1.7% in real terms, compared with a fall of 4.8% in 1983. Inflation in the year to December 1984 was 12.2%. Unemployment fell from 13.7% of the labour force in 1983 to 12.4% in 1984. Following the agreement with Venezuela's creditor banks, the Government was optimistic about the prospects for a substantial improvement in the economy in 1985.

Venezuela is a member of ALADI (see p. 171), the Andean Group (p. 95), the IDB, SELA (p. 218), the OAS and OPEC.

Transport and Communications

The length of railway track in 1984 was 268 km. A 45-km extension from Acarigua to Villa Bruzual is currently under construction. A network to link Caracas to Los Teques, Guarenas and the Tuy valley is planned. In 1981 there were 62,449 km of roads, of which 22,975 km were asphalted. A 310-km highway links Venezuela with Brazil. The construction of a 50-km underground railway in Caracas began in 1977, and the first line was opened in January 1983. The River Orinoco is navigable for about 1,120 km, and there are steamer services on Lake Maracaibo. Internal air services are well developed, and international air transport is provided by three national and a number of foreign airlines.

Social Welfare

Labour legislation protects workers and there are benefits for accidents, sickness and old age. A modified insurance scheme was introduced in 1967, entitling insured workers and their dependants to medical assistance, pensions, etc. In 1978 Venezuela had 444 hospitals, with 41,386 beds and 14,771 physicians.

Education

Primary education is free and compulsory between the ages of seven and 13. Secondary education lasts for five years. In 1982/83, 383,585 children attended nursery school, 2,998,083 primary and secondary school and 282,274 received higher education. Only 50% complete their basic education and the adult illiteracy rate is 15%. There are plans to introduce a basic cycle of six years at primary school and three years at secondary school. Experimental courses began in 1975. There are 11 universities, 106 higher education institutes and 13 private institutes. In 1982/83 the education budget was 13,310m. bolívares.

By 1976 the Ayacucho scholarship programme, founded in 1974, had placed 11,000 students in universities and other institutes of higher education, including 6,500 students abroad. The National Training Institute (INCE) has trained some 400,000 students in a wide variety of technical subjects to help reduce the chronic shortage of skilled labour.

Tourism

The mountain peaks and the many forests and lakes form the main tourist attractions. Venezuela has the world's highest waterfall, Angel Falls, with an overall drop of 979 m. (3,212 ft). In 1969 a state organization, CONAHOTU, was set up to promote tourism. Plans were announced in 1979 to invest 2,000m. bolívares in 100 hotels and several large-scale tourism complexes. In 1980 Venezuela received 1,003,000 foreign visitors (excluding excursionists). Income from tourism totalled US $246m. in 1980.

Public Holidays

The Constitution

The Constitution of Venezuela was promulgated in January 1961.

The Federal Republic of Venezuela is divided into 20 States, one Federal District, two Federal Territories and 72 Federal Dependencies. The States are autonomous but must comply with the laws and Constitution of the Republic.

The Legislative Power is exercised by Congress, divided into two Chambers: the Senate and the Chamber of Deputies.

Senators are elected by universal suffrage, two to represent each State, and two to represent the Federal District. There are in addition other Senators, their number being determined by law, who are selected on the principle of minority representation. Ex-Presidents of the Republic are life members of the Senate. Deputies are also elected by direct universal and secret suffrage, the number representing each State being at least two and for each Federal Territory one. A deputy must be of Venezuelan nationality and be over 21. Ordinary sessions of both Chambers begin on the second day of March of each year, and continue until the sixth day of the following July; thereafter, sessions are renewed from the first day of October to the thirtieth day of November, both dates inclusive. The Chamber of Deputies is empowered to initiate legislation. Congress also elects a Controller-General to preside over the Audit Office (Contraloría de la Nación), which investigates Treasury income and expenditure, and the finances of the autonomous institutes.

The Executive Power is vested in a President of the Republic elected by universal suffrage every five years; he may not serve two consecutive terms. The President is empowered to discharge the Constitution and the laws, to nominate or remove Ministers, to take supreme command of the Armed Forces, to direct foreign relations of the State, to declare a state of emergency and withdraw the civil guarantees laid down in the Constitution, to convene extraordinary sessions of the Congress, to administer national finance and to nominate and remove Governors of the Federal District and the Federal Territories. The President also appoints an Attorney-General to act as a legal arbiter for the state.

The Judicial Power is exercised by the Supreme Court of Justice and by the Tribunals. The Supreme Court forms the highest Tribunal of the Republic and the Magistrates of the Supreme Court are elected by both Chambers in joint sessions.

Judicial System

The judicature is headed by the Supreme Court of Justice. The judges are divided into penal and civil and mercantile judges; there are military, juvenile, labour, administrative litigation, finance and agrarian tribunals. In each State there is a superior court and several secondary courts which act on civil and criminal cases.

SUPREME COURT OF JUSTICE

The Supreme Court comprises 15 judges appointed by the Congress in joint session for nine years, five of them to be appointed every three years. It is divided into three courts, each with five judges: political-administrative; civil, mercantile and labour cassation; penal cassation. When these three act together the court is in full session. It has the power to abrogate any laws, regulations or other acts of the executive or legislative branches conflicting with the Constitution. It hears accusations against members of the Government and high public officials, cases involving diplomatic representatives and certain civil actions arising between the State and individuals.

President: Dr EZEQUIEL MONSALVE CASADO.

Attorney-General: PEDRO J. MANTELLINI GONZÁLEZ.

TELEVISION

In 1980 the Government introduced regulations for the television services to prevent the lowering of standards and curtail large profits from advertising. Programmes broadcast on government stations must be submitted to the Ministry 48 hours before being transmitted, will be classified according to suitability of content and must be 'educational, cultural, informative, sporting or recreational' and 'contribute to the spiritual enrichment' of the viewers. Private stations are expected to conform to these standards and may be subject to sanctions if the regulations are contravened.

RAILWAYS

Instituto Autónomo de Ferrocarriles del Estado (FERROCAR): Avda Principal Los Ruices, Edif. Stemo 1°, 2° y 3°, Apdo 146, Caracas 1010; tel. 416141; state company; 268 km from Barquisimeto to Puerto Cabello; Gen. Man. Ing. Manuel Vásquez Moya.

The Government plans to construct a 3,900-km rail network by 1990 at a cost of 9,397m. bolívares. The basic network will comprise two north–south routes and a third running from west to east. The first north–south line, crossing the western part of the country, was due for completion in 1984.

Plans are under way for building a 50-km underground railway in Caracas. The first stage, a 20-km east-west rapid transit line, was begun in 1976 and it was completed in 1983 at a total cost of over 7,000m. bolívares.

CA Metro de Caracas: Multicentro Empresarial del Este, Edif. Miranda, Torre B, Avda Francisco de Miranda, Caracas; f. 1976 to supervise the construction and use of the underground railway system; Pres. Ing. José González Lander.

CVG Ferrominera Orinoco, CA: Apdo 76.500, Caracas; state company; operates two lines Cerro Bolívar–Puerto Ordaz (179 km) and El Pao–Palua (55 km) for transporting iron ore.

ROADS

In 1981 there were 62,449 km of roads, 22,975 km of which were asphalted.

Of the three great highways, the first (960 km) runs from Caracas to Ciudad Bolívar. The second, the Pan-American Highway (1,290 km), runs from Caracas to the Colombian frontier and is continued as far as Cúcuta. A branch runs from Valencia to Puerto Cabello. The third highway runs southwards from Coro to La Ceiba, on Lake Maracaibo.

A new Marginal Highway is under construction along the western fringe of the Amazon Basin in Venezuela, Colombia, Ecuador, Peru, Bolivia and Paraguay. The Venezuelan section now runs for over 440 km and is fully paved.

A network of 15,000 km of roads was planned to give better access to the interior by 1980. Only 3,125 km of the planned roads were to be main roads or highways.

INLAND WATERWAYS

Instituto Nacional de Canalizaciones: Calle Caracas, Edif. INC, Chuao, al lado de la Torre Diamen, Apdo E.61959, Caracas; f. 1952; semi-autonomous institution connected with the Ministry of Transport and Communications; Pres. Rear-Admiral Rafael Carrillo Vásquez; Vice-Pres. Fernando Martí O.

Compañía Anónima La Translacustre: Maracaibo; freight and passenger service serving Lake Maracaibo, principally from Maracaibo to the road terminal from Caracas at Palmarejo.

SHIPPING

There are nine major ports, 34 petroleum and mineral ports and five fishing ports. The main port for imports is La Guaira, the port for Caracas; Puerto Cabello handles raw materials for the industrial region around Valencia. Maracaibo is the chief port for the oil industry. Puerto Ordaz, on the Orinoco River, has also been developed to deal with the shipments of iron from Cerro Bolívar.

The Instituto Nacional de Puertos has designed a programme aimed at satisfying port handling requirements up to 1995, to alleviate the long-standing problem of port congestion. A new port, Carenero, is to be built at an estimated cost of US $139.5m., capable of handling 2m. tons of general freight and 300,000 tons of grain a year. Improvements and expansion of other ports, including five new docks at La Guaira, completed in 1979, have significantly raised overall capacity.

Instituto Nacional de Puertos: Calle Veracruz, cruce con Cali, Edif. Instituto Nacional de Puertos, Urb. las Mercedes, Caracas; f. 1976 as the sole port authority; Pres. Ing. Carlos Villarroel.

Consolidada de Ferrys, CA: Avda Las Acacias y Calle Lincoln, Torre Lincoln, Caracas 101; tel. 7828544; telex 21736; Dirs R. Tovar, J. P. Rodríguez, H. Pinero.

VIET-NAM

Introductory Survey

Location, Climate, Language, Religion, Flag, Capital

The Socialist Republic of Viet-Nam is situated in South-East Asia, bordered to the north by the People's Republic of China, to the west by Laos and Kampuchea, and to the east by the South China Sea. The climate is humid during both the hot summer and the relatively cold winter, and there are monsoon rains in both seasons. Temperatures in Hanoi are generally between 13°C (55°F) and 33°C (91°F). The language is Vietnamese. The principal religion is Buddhism. There are also Daoist, Confucian, Hoa Hao, Caodaist and Christian (mainly Roman Catholic) minorities. The national flag (proportions 3 by 2) is red, with a large five-pointed yellow star in the centre. The capital is Hanoi.

Recent History

Cochin-China (the southernmost part of Viet-Nam) became a French colony in 1867. Annam and Tonkin (central and northern Viet-Nam) were proclaimed French protectorates in 1883. Later all three were merged with Cambodia (now Kampuchea) and Laos to form French Indo-China. Throughout the French colonial period, but especially after 1920, nationalist and revolutionary groups operated in Viet-Nam. The best organized of these was the Vietnamese Revolutionary Youth League, founded by Ho Chi Minh. The League was succeeded in February 1930 by the Communist Party of Indo-China, also led by Ho.

In September 1940 Japanese forces, with French co-operation, began to occupy Viet-Nam, and in June 1941 the nationalists formed the Viet-Nam Doc Lap Dong Minh Hoi (Revolutionary League for the Independence of Viet-Nam), known as the Viet-Minh. In March 1945 French control was ended by a Japanese coup. Following Japan's surrender in August 1945, Viet-Minh forces entered Hanoi, and on 2 September the new regime proclaimed independence as the Democratic Republic of Viet-Nam (DRV), with Ho Chi Minh as President. The Communist Party, formally dissolved in 1945, continued to be the dominant group within the Viet-Minh government. In March 1946, after French forces re-entered Viet-Nam, an agreement between France and the DRV recognized Viet-Nam as a 'free' state within the French Union but the DRV government continued to press for complete independence. Negotiations with France broke down and full-scale hostilities began in December 1946.

In March 1949 the French established the State of Viet-Nam in the South. Meanwhile, in the North the Viet-Minh was dissolved in 1951, and the Communists formed the Dang Lao Dong Viet-Nam (Viet-Nam Workers' Party), with Ho Chi Minh as Chairman of the Central Committee. After the defeat of French forces at Dien Bien Phu in May 1954, terms for a cease-fire were settled in Geneva. Agreements signed in July 1954 provided for provisional partition of Viet-Nam into two military zones, with French forces south of latitude 17°N and DRV forces in the north. Later in 1954 the French withdrew from South Viet-Nam. Ngo Dinh Diem became Prime Minister of the State of Viet-Nam and in 1955, following a referendum, proclaimed himself President of the Republic of Viet-Nam. Diem refused to participate in the elections envisaged by the Geneva agreement. In the DRV Ho Chi Minh was succeeded as Prime Minister by Pham Van Dong in 1955 but remained Head of State and Party Chairman.

The anti-communist Diem regime in the South was opposed by former members of the Viet-Minh who became known as the Viet-Cong. Diem was overthrown by a coup in November 1963 and a series of short-lived military regimes held power until June 1965, when some stability was restored by the National Leadership Committee, with Lt-Gen. Nguyen Van Thieu as Chairman and Air Vice-Marshal Nguyen Cao Ky as Prime Minister. In 1967 Gen. Thieu was elected President, with Marshal Ky as Vice-President, and in 1971, after splitting with Ky, President Thieu was re-elected unopposed.

From 1959 the DRV actively assisted the insurgent movement in South Viet-Nam and it supported the establishment of the communist-dominated National Liberation Front (NLF) there in December 1960. In 1961 the USA joined the war on the side of the anti-communist regime in Saigon, later bombing the North extensively from 1965 to 1968. In November 1968 peace talks between the four participants in the Viet-Nam war began in Paris but remained deadlocked as the fighting continued. In June 1969 the NLF formed a provisional Revolutionary Government (PRG) in the South. Ho Chi Minh died in September 1969 and was succeeded as Head of State by Ton Duc Thang, while political leadership passed to Le Duan, First Secretary of the Party since 1960.

In 1972 PRG and North Vietnamese forces launched a major offensive in South Viet-Nam and US bombing of the North was renewed with greater intensity. In January 1973 a peace agreement was finally signed. It provided for a cease-fire in the South, the withdrawal of US forces, the eventual peaceful reunification of the whole country, and US aid to the Government in the North to assist in reconstruction. US troops were withdrawn, but in December 1974 combined PRG and North Vietnamese forces launched a major offensive, and the capital fell in April 1975. By May the new regime was in complete control of South Viet-Nam.

While South Viet-Nam, under the PRG, remained technically separate from the DRV, effective control of the whole country passed to Hanoi. In July 1976 the country's reunification was proclaimed under the name of the Socialist Republic of Viet-Nam, and Saigon was renamed Ho Chi Minh City. A new government was appointed, dominated by members of the former Government of the DRV but including some members of the PRG. In December Le Duan was appointed Secretary-General of the Communist Party of Viet-Nam (formerly the Viet-Nam Workers' Party). President Ton Duc Thang died in March 1980. Truong Chinh was appointed President of the Council of State in July 1981, but real power remains with Le Duan. In March 1982 the fifth Communist Party Congress elected a new Politburo and Central Committee. Some prominent figures were removed from office, while younger members were promoted.

By the end of 1976 Viet-Nam had established diplomatic relations with many countries, including all of its South-East Asian neighbours. However, tension arose over the growing number of Vietnamese refugees (particularly ethnic Chinese) arriving in these countries. In 1979 more than 200,000 fled Viet-Nam, and in July an international conference was convened in Geneva to discuss the situation. By 1984 the number of refugees leaving by sea ('boat people') had fallen to 30,000, owing to the Orderly Departure Programme, sponsored by the UNHCR, whereby Viet-Nam agreed to legal departures (an average of about 2,000 per month, compared with about 10,000 per month during 1979–81), and to the increasing reluctance of Western countries to accept huge numbers of refugees.

Relations with Kampuchea deteriorated during 1977, and in December Viet-Nam launched a major offensive into eastern Kampuchea. Sporadic fighting continued, and in December 1978 Viet-Nam invaded Kampuchea in support of elements opposed to the regime (see Kampuchea, p. 1954). By January 1979 the government of Pol Pot had been overthrown and a pro-Vietnamese government was installed. The invasion prompted much international criticism, and in February 1979 Chinese forces launched a punitive attack across the border into Viet-Nam. Peace talks began in April but made little progress, and in March 1980 they were suspended by China. In March 1983 Viet-Nam rejected a five-point peace plan, proposed by China, aimed at resolving the dispute over Kampuchea. In April 1984, following a year with little incident, China launched artillery attacks against Vietnamese troops and reportedly crossed into Viet-Nam, apparently in retaliation for Vietnamese provocation. Since then, Chinese and Vietnamese troops have been engaged in the heaviest fighting since the 1979 invasion, and have accused each other of persistent border incursions and shelling. China does not intend to normalize relations with Viet-Nam until Vietnamese troops are withdrawn from Kampuchea, and the attacks are widely seen as an attempt to divert Viet-Nam's attention away from its offensive on the Democratic Kampuchean guerrillas in Kampuchea. Since 1980 relations with Thailand have worsened, over the issues of Khmer border refugee camps, Thailand's refugee repatriation scheme and ASEAN's support for the exiled coalition government of Democratic Kampuchea. In 1984/85 Viet-Nam launched its largest dry-season offensive against the guerrillas since 1978. By March 1985 Vietnamese troops had gained control of all of the guerrilla bases, positioned along the Thai–Kampuchean border, which were formerly held by the three groups within the coalition. The fierce fighting has now sent more than 400,000 Kampuchean refugees into Thailand, seeking safety, of whom about 240,000 have fled since November 1984. Thai troops have also been engaged in battles with the Vietnamese forces, some of whom have crossed into Thailand in pursuit of Kampuchean rebels.

During 1984 Nguyen Co Thach, the Minister of Foreign Affairs, visited Japan and Indonesia, leading to hopes that some progress might be made on the future of Kampuchea. In March Viet-Nam agreed in principle that it would eventually withdraw its troops from Kampuchea, but not for five to 10 years. By early 1985, however, Viet-Nam had not made any compromises regarding Kampuchea, and the likelihood of an international conference remained remote.

From the mid-1970s Viet-Nam moved closer to the USSR; in June 1978 it became a member of the CMEA (see p. 128), and in November a treaty of friendship and co-operation with the USSR was signed. A fifth signing in June 1983 increased Viet-Nam's dependence on the USSR. By early 1985 relations with the USA had still not been normalized, although during 1984 agreements were made concerning the return to the USA of the remains of American soldiers from Viet-Nam, and the proposed resettlement in the USA of some 10,000 Vietnamese 'political prisoners'.

Government

In 1980 the 1959 constitution of the former DRV was replaced by a new constitution. Legislative power is vested in the 496-member National Assembly, elected for five years by universal adult suffrage. The Assembly elects the Council of State which, as the collective Presidency, is the highest organ of the National Assembly. Executive power is exercised by the Council of Ministers, responsible to the Assembly. Locally elected People's Councils operate at district, town and village level. The constitution describes the Communist Party of Viet-Nam as 'the only force leading the state and society'.

Defence

In July 1984 the armed forces of Viet-Nam had an estimated total strength of 1,027,000 (army 1.0m., navy 12,000, air force 15,000). There are 56 infantry divisions, including forces abroad (an estimated 40,000 men in Laos and 160,000 in Kampuchea). Military service is compulsory and usually lasts for three years. Paramilitary forces include Border Defence Forces (estimated at 60,000 men), the People's Regional Force (a militia with about 500,000 members), the People's Self-Defence Force (with about 1m. members) and the Armed Youth Assault Force (an estimated 1.5m. young people). Following the PRG's victory in the South, the army came into possession of vast amounts of US arms and equipment, although much of it is inoperable. Viet-Nam is believed to have the fourth largest army in the world.

Economic Affairs

The economy of Viet-Nam was seriously disrupted by the war but, since the ending of hostilities in 1975, great progress has been made towards reconstruction. The two halves of the country remain economically distinct, the state-controlled system being well-established in the north, while in the south a considerable amount of private enterprise was permitted until April 1978, when a campaign against small businesses in Ho Chi Minh City was launched. In May 1978 a unified currency was introduced throughout the country. Collectivization of agriculture in the south has been gradually extended, and by 1979 there were about 800 agricultural co-operatives. New Economic Zones (NEZs) have increased the area under cultivation, and major transfers of population from the urban centres to the countryside are taking place. During the period 1976–80 about 1.6m. people were resettled in NEZs. A similar number were expected to be moved south during the third Five-Year Plan (1981–85).

The economy, especially in the south, is predominantly agricultural. In 1981 about 60% of the labour force were engaged in agriculture. The staple crop is rice, although significant amounts of maize, sorghum, cassava, sweet potatoes and fruit are also grown. In 1983 and 1984 record grain crops of 17m. metric tons were harvested, compared with 16.59m. tons in 1982. In 1984 about 400,000 tons were destroyed by floodings. Production of paddy rice in 1984 was more than 14m. tons, while the subsidiary crops were below target at 2.2m. tons. Viet-Nam became self-sufficient in food for the first time in 1983, following rice imports of 1.5m. tons in 1979 and 400,000 tons in 1982. The progress is largely due to the Government's relaxation of restrictions on the sale of surplus grain on the open market, thus encouraging increased production. Industrial crops include rubber, sugar cane, tobacco, coconuts, kenaf, tea and coffee. The total forested area of Viet-Nam has fallen to 7.9m. ha, owing to destruction of trees, extensive farming and the failure to protect the area. The Government is encouraging the exploitation of valuable timber resources. Considerable efforts are being made to increase agricultural output by mechanization, land reclamation, double cropping and irrigation. In 1984 the total seafood catch was 765,000 metric tons, much of which was exported to Japan.

Most of the country's mineral resources are found in the north. Coal, Viet-Nam's main export, is the most important of these, with an estimated annual output of about 6m. metric tons of hard coal. Proven reserves are about 130m. tons, sufficient for more than 20 years' supply at current production levels. In 1982 Viet-Nam exported an estimated 800,000 metric tons of coal, mostly to capitalist countries. Other minerals include tin, copper, chromium ore and apatite (phosphate rock). In early 1979 an offshore petroleum programme began with the drilling of a well in the South China Sea, south-east of Ho Chi Minh City. In 1984 an offshore deposit of petroleum was discovered near the southern coast by the USSR, working in co-operation with Viet-Nam. According to IMF estimates, Viet-Nam imported 1.65m. metric tons of petroleum products in 1982, mostly from the USSR. The first stage of the Pha Lai thermal power station, which will have an eventual total capacity of 110,000 kW, came into operation in October 1983, thus easing energy problems. Viet-Nam's first nuclear research reactor, at Da Lat, was inaugurated in March 1984, with a capacity of 500 kW.

Industry is mainly concentrated in the north. Heavy US bombing from 1965 to 1973 destroyed an estimated 70% of productive capacity but by 1976 output in many sectors had regained pre-war levels, although the border war with China in early 1979 and the exodus of more than 200,000 ethnic Chinese from the north lowered output. The principal industries are food-processing, cement, metallurgy, chemicals, paper, engineering and textiles. Production of fertilizers continued to decline, from 607,000 metric tons in 1978 to 244,000 tons in 1982, when 900,000 tons were imported from the USSR. In 1983 gross output value in the industrial sector grew by 15%, compared with an annual average increase of 0.6% during the 1976–80 Plan period. The increase is mainly a result of the liberalization of capitalist enterprises in 1979 and the subsequent growth of small industries.

Viet-Nam's economic growth has been restricted by a series of natural disasters which have ruined successive crops, and a high rate of population increase, which in 1982 was 2.6%. It was hoped to reduce the rate to 1.7% by 1985 but this has proved to be too ambitious. GDP grew by 5.9% in 1983, compared with 8.2% in 1982. In 1982 exports increased in value by 30% to reach US $595m., but the trade deficit remained high, at US $838m., according to IMF estimates. The deficit widened in 1983 to US $898m. Viet-Nam's principal trading partners are the USSR and Japan. The deficit on the current account of the balance of payments also increased, from US $898m. in 1982 to US $926m. in 1983. At the end of 1983 the country's reserves of foreign exchange were reportedly nearly exhausted, at US $16m., sufficient for only two weeks' imports. At the same time, Viet-Nam's foreign debt had reached about US $6,000m., of which US $1,500m. comprised convertible currency debts. About two-thirds of the total debt is owed to socialist countries. In early 1985 the Government, unable to meet outstanding loan repayments, announced that it had negotiated a rescheduling of part of the debt with a number of donor countries, but that the IMF had not yet agreed to reschedule payments due to it and to Japan. In April the dông was devalued by 88% against the US dollar, raising the rate of exchange from 11.7 to 100 dông per dollar.

In March 1983 a series of changes in the tax system were introduced in an effort to reduce the budget deficit, which stood at 4,000m. dông (US $440m.) at the end of 1982. The deficit was reduced from 19% of GDP in 1982 to 11% in 1983. It was hoped that the amendments would also curb the expansion of private trading. In 1983 tax revenues from private enterprise rose by 55%. More than one-half of the national budget is thought to be spent on defence. Following the failure of the second Five-Year Plan (1976–80), which had set unrealistically high targets, the Government revised and lowered the targets of the third Five-Year Plan (1981–85), which aimed to increase agricultural production, to alleviate the acute shortage of food, and to achieve economic self-sufficiency. The development of transport and communications will, it is hoped, relieve the country's distribution problems. According to IMF estimates, the annual rate of inflation was reduced from 90% in 1982 to 50% in 1983, and per caput income was about $195 in 1983.

The Vietnamese economy is heavily dependent on a large amount of foreign aid and has received support from international organizations and non-communist countries as well as its traditional sources of economic assistance, the USSR, Eastern Europe and, until 1978, the People's Republic of China. The CMEA assisted in more than 100 projects during 1981–85, principally in energy, mining, metallurgy, chemicals and agriculture. In 1976 Viet-Nam joined the IMF and the World Bank. In 1981 the IMF granted a loan of US $36m., and France resumed aid, of US $40m., to help the Government's economic programme and to finance development projects.

Transport and Communications

Until 1974 there was a total of only 72,945 km of roads but, since hostilities ended, many roads have been repaired and new roads built. In 1983 there was a total of 347,243 km of roads, including 60,000 km of main roads. The Government has attached great importance to the restoration of the railway system, and several principal lines are now in operation. In 1975 a long-distance bus service opened between Ho Chi Minh City and Hanoi, and air services began between the two cities. Gia Lam (near Hanoi), Tan Son Nhat International (Ho Chi Minh City) and Thu Do International are the principal airports. In 1979 it was reported that Viet-Nam's first satellite telecommunications system was under construction.

Social Welfare

The state operates a system of social security. In 1982 there were 12,000 hospitals, with a total of 200,000 beds, and 45,000 physicians. Mobile medical teams treat trachoma, malaria and other diseases. In 1977 the World Health Organization announced a US $9.5m. programme to combat malaria in Viet-Nam.

Education

There is compulsory, free education, where possible, for 10 years. Primary education begins at six years of age and lasts for five years. In 1980 an estimated 98% of children in the relevant age-group were enrolled at primary schools. Secondary education, beginning at the age of 11, lasts for up to seven years. Total secondary enrolment in 1980 was equivalent to 48% of children in the age-group (53% of boys; 43% of girls). In 1982/83 there were 11.6m. pupils receiving general education and 140,524 receiving higher education. In 1981/82 there were 109,142 students enrolled in professional education and 43,883 in technical education. In 1982/83 there were 108 teacher training colleges and 84 universities and colleges of higher education. A 12-year educational reform programme was introduced in 1981/82 to replace the 10-year system. In 1979 the adult illiteracy rate averaged 16.0% (males 9.5%; females 21.7%).

Directory

The Constitution

On 18 December 1980 the National Assembly adopted a new constitution to replace the 1959 constitution of the Democratic Republic of Viet-Nam. It consists of a preamble and 12 chapters comprising 147 articles. A summary of the main provisions follows:

GENERAL PRINCIPLES

The Socialist Republic of Viet-Nam is an independent, sovereign and united country. It is a proletarian dictatorship and the people exercise state power through the National Assembly and the People's Councils at all levels.

ECONOMIC SYSTEM

The economy is run on the principles of socialism, and ensures the working people's collective ownership of the means of production. The economy is directed by unified plans.

NATIONAL ASSEMBLY

Elected for five years by nationwide elections, it is the highest state authority. It meets regularly twice a year and also in extraordinary sessions. It elects from its deputies the Chairman, Vice-Chairmen and other members of the Council of State. The Assembly also appoints the Council of Ministers, the Chief Justice of the Supreme People's Court and the Procurator-General of the Supreme People's Organ of Control. It decides, assisted by the Standing Commissions of the National Assembly, domestic and foreign policies, economic plans and, among other functions, examines and approves the budget.

COUNCIL OF STATE

It is the highest continuously functioning body of the National Assembly and is the Collective Presidency of Viet-Nam. It is concerned with the building of socialism, national defence, the implementation of laws, and all domestic and foreign affairs. Its term of office is the same as that of the National Assembly, to which it is accountable, and its Chairman is concurrently Chairman of the National Defence Council and commander of the armed forces.

COUNCIL OF MINISTERS

It is the government of Viet-Nam and is responsible to the National Assembly, to which it submits draft laws, decrees and budgets. Its term of office corresponds with that of the National Assembly.

LOCAL GOVERNMENT

The country is divided into provinces and municipalities directly under central authority, and subdivided into districts, towns and villages. These are under the authority of locally elected People's Councils.

JUDICIAL SYSTEM

The Judicial System consists of the Supreme People's Court, the local People's Courts and the Military Tribunals. There are also local People's Organs of Control, under the Supreme People's Organ of Control, to ensure observance of law.

Judicial System

The judicial system has been thoroughly revised since 1954. The Supreme People's Court in Hanoi is the highest court and exercises civil and criminal jurisdiction over all lower courts. The Supreme Court may also conduct trials of the first instance in certain cases. There are People's Courts in each province and city which exercise jurisdiction in the first and second instance. Military courts hear cases involving members of the People's Army and cases involving national security. The observance of the law by ministries, government offices and all citizens is the concern of the People's Organs of Control, under a Supreme People's Organ of Control.

President of the People's Supreme Court: Pham Hung.

President of the Supreme People's Organ of Control: Tran Le.

Religion

Traditional Vietnamese religion included elements of Indian and all three Chinese religions: Mahayana Buddhism, Daoism and Confucianism. Its most widespread feature was the cult of ancestors, practised in individual households and clan temples. In addition, there were (and remain) a wide variety of Buddhist sects, the sects belonging to the 'new' religions of Caodaism and Hoa Hao, and the Protestant and Roman Catholic Churches. The government has guaranteed complete freedom of religious belief.

BUDDHISM

In the north a Buddhist organization, grouping Buddhists loyal to the Democratic Republic of Viet-Nam, was formed in 1954. In the south the United Buddhist Church was formed in 1964, incorporating several disparate groups, including the 'militant' An-Quang group (mainly natives of central Viet-Nam), the group of Thich Tam Chau (mainly northern emigrés in Saigon) and the southern Buddhists of the Xa-Loi temple. In 1982 the Buddhist sects were unified into one organization, the Viet-Nam Buddhist Church.

CAODAISM

Formally inaugurated in 1926, this is a syncretic religion based on spiritualist seances with a predominantly ethical content, but sometimes with political overtones. A number of different sects exist, of which the most politically involved (1940–75) was that of Tay-Ninh. Another sect, the Tien-Thien, has been represented in the National Liberation Front since its inception. Together the sects are said to number 2m. adepts. They live mostly in the south.

Leader: Cardinal Thai Huu Thanh.

CHRISTIANITY

The Roman Catholic Church

The Roman Catholic Church has been active in Viet-Nam since the 17th century, and since 1933 has been led mainly by Vietnamese priests. Many Roman Catholics moved from North to South Viet-Nam in 1954–55 to avoid living under communist rule, but some remained in the north. There are about 3.5m. adherents throughout the country.

The Protestant Church

HOA HAO

A new manifestation of an older religion called Buu Son Ky Huong, the Hoa Hao sect was founded by Nguyen Phu So in 1939, and at one time claimed 1.5m. adherents in southern Viet-Nam.

WESTERN SAMOA

Introductory Survey

Location, Climate, Language, Religion, Flag, Capital

The Independent State of Western Samoa lies in the southern Pacific Ocean, about 2,400 km (1,500 miles) north of New Zealand. Its nearest neighbour is American Samoa, to the east. The country comprises two large and seven small islands, of which five are uninhabited. The climate is tropical, with temperatures generally between 23°C (73°F) and 30°C (86°F). The rainy season is from November to April. The languages are Samoan (a Polynesian language) and English. Almost all of the inhabitants profess Christianity, and the major denominations are the Congregational, Roman Catholic and Methodist Churches. The national flag (proportions 2 by 1) is red, with a rectangular blue canton, containing five white five-pointed stars in the form of the Southern Cross constellation, in the upper hoist. The capital is Apia.

Recent History

The islands became a German protectorate in 1899. During the First World War (1914–18) they were occupied by New Zealand forces, who overthrew the German administration. In 1919 New Zealand was granted a League of Nations mandate to govern the islands. In 1946 Western Samoa was made a UN Trust Territory, with New Zealand continuing as the administering power. From 1954 measures of internal self-government were gradually introduced, culminating in the adoption of an independence constitution in October 1960. This was approved by a UN-supervised plebiscite in May 1961, and the islands became independent on 1 January 1962. The office of Head of State was held jointly by two traditional rulers but, upon the death of his colleague in April 1963, Malietoa Tanumafili II became sole Head of State for life, performing the duties of a constitutional monarch.

Fiame Mata'afa Mulinu'u, Prime Minister since 1959, lost the general election of 1970, and a new Cabinet, led by Tupua Tamasese Lealofi, was formed. Mata'afa regained power in 1973, following another general election, and held it until his death in May 1975. He was again succeeded by Tamasese, who, in turn, lost the general election of March 1976 to Tupuola Taisi Efi, the first Prime Minister not of royal blood. The previously unorganized opposition members formed the Human Rights Protection Party (HRPP) in 1979, and won the elections of February 1982, with 24 of the 47 seats in the Fono (Legislative Assembly). Va'ai Kolone was elected Prime Minister, but in September he was removed from office as a result of past electoral malpractice. His successor, Tupuola Efi, with much popular support, sought to nullify an earlier agreement between Kolone and the New Zealand Government which, in the face of a ruling by the British Privy Council, denied automatic New Zealand citizenship to all Western Samoans except those already living in New Zealand. However, Tupuola Efi resigned in December 1982, after the Fono had rejected his budget, and was replaced by the new HRPP leader, Tofilau Eti Alesana. At elections in February 1985, the HRPP won 31 of the 47 seats, increasing its majority in the Fono from one to 15 seats.

Government

The Constitution provides for a Head of State, to be elected by the Legislative Assembly for a term of five years. The present Head of State, however, holds the office for life. The Legislative Assembly is composed of 47 members. Of these, 45 are Samoans elected by holders of Matai titles (elected clan chiefs), of whom there are about 16,000 on the rolls, and two are elected by universal suffrage of those on the individual voters' rolls (mainly Europeans). Members hold office for three years. Executive power is held by the Cabinet, comprising the Prime Minister and eight other members of the Assembly. The Prime Minister is appointed by the Head of State with the necessary approval of the Assembly.

Defence

In August 1962 Western Samoa and New Zealand signed a Treaty of Friendship, whereby the New Zealand Government, on request, acts as the sole agent of the Western Samoan Government in its dealings with other countries and international organizations.

Economic Affairs

The economy is based on agriculture, which contributes about one-half of Western Samoa's gross domestic product. Agriculture is mainly at subsistence level but also provides about 90% of the country's export earnings. The principal crops are coconuts, cocoa, taro and bananas, but small quantities of coffee and timber are also exported. New Zealand is Western Samoa's principal trading partner, accounting for 33.7% of total trade in 1983. Australia, the USA, Japan, Fiji and the Federal Republic of Germany are also important trading partners.

Several small industrial enterprises have been established in recent years. These are principally concerned with the processing of foodstuffs, but there are also plans to develop the timber industry by large-scale exploitation of forest resources on the islands of Savai'i and Upolu. In 1982 work began in Apia on a copra mill. In September 1982 the Government instituted a scheme to cut the cost of essential imports by bulk-purchase, whereby merchants were obliged to buy only from a few licensed importers, but the scheme was suspended in July 1983 after the Government had decided that its main aim, of saving foreign exchange in order to pay off the country's considerable foreign and internal debts, had been achieved. However, critics pointed out that the scheme had been responsible for shortages of certain essential commodities, and that the resulting price rises had contributed to an inflation rate of 16.7% in 1983. The progressive devaluation of the tala, by 17.5% in 1983 and by a further 8% in May and June 1984, helped to increase the value of exports by nearly 74% in 1983. The real growth of GDP, which had been negative in 1980–82, was 0.5% in 1983. Inflation was 11.9% in 1984.

Transport and Communications

In 1983 Western Samoa had 2,085 km of roads, of which 299 km were surfaced and 1,180 km were plantation roads. It is well served by shipping lines, and there is a daily service linking Apia with Pago Pago in American Samoa. Apia and Asau (Savai'i Island) each have a deep-water wharf. There is an international airport at Faleolo, about 40 km from Apia.

Social Welfare

In 1978 Western Samoa had 16 hospital establishments, with a total of 674 beds, and in 1979 there were 60 physicians.

Education

The education system is based on that of New Zealand. In 1983 there were 52,051 children attending school. About 97% of the adult population are literate in Samoan. In January 1985 the Legislative Assembly approved a proposal to establish a national university.

Tourism

Western Samoa has maintained a cautious attitude towards tourism, fearing that the Samoan way of life might be disrupted by an influx of foreign visitors. The importance of income from tourism has, however, led to some development, and 36,717 foreign visitors arrived in 1983. The principal attractions are the scenery and the pleasant climate.

Directory

The Constitution

A new Constitution was adopted by a Constitutional Convention on 28 October 1960. After being approved by a UN-supervised plebiscite in May 1961, the Constitution came into force on 1 January 1962, when Western Samoa became independent. Its main provisions are summarized below:

HEAD OF STATE

The office of Head of State is held (since 5 April 1963, when his co-ruler died) by HH Malietoa Tanumafili II, who will hold this post for life. After that the Head of State will be elected by the Legislative Assembly for a term of five years.

EXECUTIVE

Executive power lies with the Cabinet, consisting of a Prime Minister, supported by the majority in the Legislative Assembly, and eight Ministers selected by the Prime Minister. Cabinet decisions are subject to review by the Executive Council, which is made up of the Head of State and Cabinet.

LEGISLATURE

Since the general election of 25 February 1967, the Legislative Assembly has consisted of 47 members. It has a three-year term and the Speaker is elected from among the members. Samoans and non-Samoans have separate electoral rolls. Two members of the Assembly are elected from the individual voters' roll by universal adult suffrage, while the remaining 45 members are chosen by Matai (elected clan leaders) in 41 traditional electoral constituencies.

THE YEMEN ARAB REPUBLIC

Introductory Survey

Location, Climate, Language, Religion, Flag, Capital

The Yemen Arab Republic is situated in the south-west corner of the Arabian peninsula, bounded to the north and east by Saudi Arabia, to the west by the Red Sea, and to the south and east by the People's Democratic Republic of Yemen. The climate in the semi-desert coastal strip is hot, with high humidity; inland, the climate is somewhat less hot, with heavy rainfall. The eastern plateau slopes into desert. The language is Arabic. The population is almost entirely Muslim, split between the farming Shafi'i community of the Sunni sect, in the south, and the tribal Zaidi community of the Shi'ah sect, in the north, who have traditionally formed the government. The national flag (proportions 3 by 2) has three equal horizontal stripes, of red, white and black, with a five-pointed green star in the centre of the white stripe. The capital is Sana'a.

Recent History

The Yemen Arab Republic (since 1967 also known as North Yemen) was formerly a kingdom. When Turkey's Ottoman Empire was dissolved in 1918, the Imam Yahya, leader of the Zaidi community, was left in control. In 1948 Yahya was assassinated in a palace coup, when power was seized by forces opposed to his feudal rule. However, Yahya's son, Ahmed, defeated the rebel forces and succeeded as Imam. During the 1950s Yemen's traditional isolation was eased, and in 1958 Yemen and the United Arab Republic (Egypt and Syria) formed a federation called the United Arab States, though this was dissolved at the end of 1961.

The Imam Ahmad died in September 1962 and was succeeded by his son, Muhammad. A week later, army officers, led by Col (later Marshal) Abdullah al-Sallal, staged a coup, declared the Imam deposed and proclaimed the Yemen Arab Republic (YAR). Civil war broke out between royalist forces, supported by Saudi Arabia, and republicans, aided by Egyptian troops. The republicans gained the upper hand and Egyptian forces withdrew in 1967. In November 1967 President Sallal was deposed while abroad, and a Republican Council took power. In the same month Britain withdrew from neighbouring South Arabia, which became independent as Southern Yemen (since 1970 called the People's Democratic Republic of Yemen or PDRY). The new regime there introduced repressive measures and more than 300,000 Southern Yemenis fled to the YAR. Backed by Saudi Arabia and Libya, many of the refugees joined mercenary organizations, aimed at the overthrow of the Marxist regime in Southern Yemen, and carried out raids across the border.

Intermittent fighting, beginning in early 1971, flared into open warfare between the two Yemens in October 1972, with the YAR receiving aid from Saudi Arabia and the PDRY being supported by Soviet arms. A cease-fire was arranged under the auspices of the Arab League, and soon afterwards both sides agreed to the union of the two Yemens within 18 months. The union was not implemented.

On 13 June 1974 a 10-member Military Command Council, subsequently reduced in numbers, seized power under the leadership of the pro-Saudi Lt-Col Ibrahim al-Hamadi. Col Hamadi appointed Mohsin al-Aini as Prime Minister, but replaced him by Abdel-Aziz Abdel-Ghani in January 1975 in a move which seemed to reassert the influence of Saudi Arabia. During 1975 the Military Command Council was further reduced in size, and there were reports of an attempted pro-royalist coup in August. After 1975 Hamadi turned away from the USSR and endeavoured to re-equip the army with US weapons, making use of financial assistance from Saudi Arabia. In October 1977, however, Hamadi was assassinated in Sana'a. There was much speculation about who was responsible. Another member of the Military Command Council, Lt-Col Ahmed ibn Hussein al-Ghashmi, took over as Chairman and martial law was imposed. In February 1978 the Command Council appointed a Constituent People's Assembly and in April the Assembly elected Ghashmi President of the Republic. The Command Council was then dissolved. In June 1978 President Ghashmi was killed when a bomb in a suitcase carried by a South Yemen envoy exploded. The assassination led to a change of regime in the PDRY, and to the election in July of Lt-Col Ali Abdullah Saleh as President of the YAR. Renewed fighting broke out between the YAR and the PDRY in February and March 1979, when the National Democratic Front (NDF), an alliance of disaffected politicians, won the backing of the PDRY and raised a revolt. On 29 March, however, at a meeting in Kuwait arranged by the Arab League between the North and South Yemeni Heads of State, an agreement was signed pledging complete union of the two states. The NDF was promised posts in the Government but the promise was not kept and NDF forces rebelled again in 1982. They were defeated and forced over the border into the PDRY, where they remain in a semi-organized state. Cordial meetings have since taken place between representatives of the two countries. In a government reshuffle in October 1980, Dr Abdul Karim al-Iryani replaced Abdel-Aziz Abdel-Ghani as Prime Minister. Abdel-Ghani was subsequently reappointed Prime Minister in a ministerial reshuffle in November 1983. Al-Iryani lost his post in the Council of Ministers but he was appointed Deputy Prime Minister and Minister of Foreign Affairs in another reshuffle in November 1984. In December 1981 both Yemens signed a draft constitution for a unified state, and further meetings took place in 1982 to discuss details of unity. In Sana'a, a General People's Congress was held in August and September 1982 (see Government, below).

In May 1983 President Saleh submitted his resignation at an extraordinary meeting of the Constituent People's Assembly, saying that he would nominate himself in the presidential elections. His current term of office was due to end in July 1983. However, he was nominated and unanimously re-elected by the Assembly for a further five-year term. Elections for the Assembly itself were scheduled for early 1983 but were postponed.

It is estimated that one-half of the 4,000 Palestinian guerrillas evacuated from Tripoli (Lebanon) in December 1983 are now in the YAR, in addition to the 600 who arrived from Beirut in August 1982. Yasser Arafat has made Sana'a the military headquarters of the Palestine National Liberation Movement (Fatah).

The first session of the joint YAR/PDRY Yemen Council (which had been established in 1981) was held in Sana'a in August 1983 and discussed the state of progress towards unification. These sessions, scheduled to take place every six months, will alternate between Sana'a and Aden in the PDRY.

The YAR signed a 20-year treaty of friendship and co-operation with the USSR in October 1984, but the potential significance of this move in political terms was undercut by parallel developments in the YAR's nascent oil industry, which could ultimately reduce its dependence on foreign aid.

Government

Executive power is vested in the President, elected for a five-year term by the Constituent People's Assembly. He rules with the assistance of an appointed Council of Ministers, led by a Prime Minister. In May 1979 the Assembly was increased from 99 to 159 members, with a two-year term of office. A General People's Congress, consisting of 700 elected and 300 appointed representatives, met in August 1982. It will meet every two years and be re-elected every four years. The Constituent People's Assembly is to continue.

Defence

In July 1984 armed forces totalled 36,550, of whom 35,000 were in the army, 550 in the navy and 1,000 in the air force. Defence expenditure for 1982 was an estimated 2,404m. riyals. There is a three-year period of compulsory military service.

Economic Affairs

Agriculture is the principal activity, and industry, which absorbs only about 5% of the work-force, contributes less than 6% of GDP. Investment in industry is increasing, however, and the target for industry's contribution to GDP of 8.6% in 1986 is expected to be exceeded comfortably. The relatively fertile land in the highlands is terraced and irrigated. The principal crops are millet, maize, sorghum and oats. Oranges, plums, apricots, apples, bananas, quinces and lemons are grown, and dates are produced in low-lying areas. Cultivation of qat (kat), a narcotic shrub, has increased in recent years. Between 41,000 and 47,000 ha, including some of the best ground for cultivation in the country, is given over to the crop, which is valued at $1,200m. per year. Cotton was the principal export crop until 1977 but coffee is now more important, although in decline.

The country has traditionally been able to support a large population (equal to the total native population of the whole of the rest of the Arabian peninsula) because of its relatively high rainfall and fertile soil, which permit dense subsistence agriculture in favourable areas.

The economy was transformed by the rush of wealth from the petroleum industry in neighbouring Saudi Arabia and other Gulf states, which created thousands of jobs for expatriate Yemenis. The 1981 census estimated that 1,395,123 Yemenis were living abroad. The drain on domestic labour has caused agriculture to decline and has hindered the development of industry but, such is the value to the economy of remittances from expatriate workers, the Government cannot afford to stem the tide of emigration. The economy relies almost entirely on the twin props of foreign currency from workers' remittances (mostly from about 1m. Yemenis, about one-half of the labour force, working in Saudi Arabia) and foreign aid to offset a huge trade deficit (exports cover at most only 1% or 2% of imports by value). Income from both sources fell at the beginning of the 1980s as a result of the recession in the petroleum industry. Workers' remittances, which fell to US $900m. in 1981, brought in about $1,300m. in 1983, but Arab aid fell from $440m. in 1982 to $160m. in 1983. Saudi Arabia, however, did renew its pledge of several hundred million dollars per year in budgetary aid.

In January 1984, in an effort to control the current deficit on the balance of payments, the new Government announced an austerity budget for 1984, with planned expenditure of 8,176m. riyals ($1,741m.), compared with 8,720m. riyals ($1,856m.) in 1983. However, the overall budget deficit for 1984 was calculated at 2,668m. riyals ($457m.), compared with 777m. riyals ($165m.) in 1983 and 950m. riyals ($202m.) in 1982. At the end of September 1983 the previous Government had introduced measures for controlling the balance-of-payments deficit, including the ending of Central Bank support for the riyal, the tightening of import licensing regulations, direct control of the $2,000m. annual import bill and firm action to curb smuggling. In 1983 registered imports fell by about 8%, to $1,800m., and the current account deficit fell by 7%. However, the value of smuggled imports is believed to have increased by nearly 50%, to $1,000m. Smuggling is operated on a massive scale by the northern tribes, both into and out of Saudi Arabia, and is costing the YAR millions of dollars every year in lost revenue. The Government cannot afford to impose measures against smuggling which are too severe, as its authority relies to a significant extent on the goodwill of the volatile northern tribes. Equally, Saudi Arabia, which has an interest in the tribes' influence (which helps to keep the YAR independent and at a distance from the communist PDRY) and which subsidizes the tribes with between $60m. and $80m. per year, has no wish to alienate them by introducing stringent controls. Violent incidents on the Saudi–YAR border at the end of 1983 and in early 1984 may have been related to attempts by the YAR to impose smuggling controls.

The country's development effort has been channelled into a three-year plan (1974–76) and two five-year plans (1977–81 and 1982–86). Allocations under the first (three-year) plan were 936m. riyals, while those of the two subsequent five-year plans were 16,500m. riyals and 27,400m. riyals respectively. These capital sums were far higher than the YAR could hope to generate itself, and massive foreign investment, accounting for 75% of financing for the three-year plan and 42% and 45% respectively for the two five-year plans, was required. The majority of this aid has come from Saudi Arabia and Kuwait. GDP is projected to grow by 7% annually under the 1982–86 plan, compared with an average annual increase of 6.2% under the 1977–81 plan.

The second five-year plan quickly encountered difficulties. In December 1982 a major earthquake in Dhamar province caused great loss of life and widespread damage which, it is estimated, will cost $650m. to repair. Economic growth in 1983 was expected to be only one-half of the planned rate. In the ministerial reshuffle of November 1983, Abdul Karim al-Iryani lost the post of Prime Minister and was appointed Chairman of the Supreme Council for Reconstruction in the areas affected by the earthquake.

In July 1984 the Yemen Hunt Oil Company (a subsidiary of the US Hunt Oil Company) made the first discovery of oil in commercial quantities in the YAR, in the Marib al-Jawf basin in the north-east of the country. The find, known as the Alef field, was producing about 10,000 b/d at the end of 1984 from a total of three wells, which were to be increased to six by April 1985. The field's reserves have been estimated at 200m. barrels and production levels should be a minimum of 75,000 b/d and a maximum of 300,000 b/d. The YAR's annual oil consumption is only 17,000 b/d and the potential for the country to become an oil exporter, and thereby to transform its economy, is clear. The Government set up a Supreme Council for Oil and Mineral Resources in February 1985, and appointed Deputy Prime Minister Abdul Karim al-Iryani as its chairman. The Council is designed to encourage investment in the oil and minerals sector, and to examine means of exploiting the country's energy resources. There are plans to establish a refinery and a 400-km export pipeline, expected to run from Alef to the Red Sea. In December 1984 President Ali Abdullah Saleh said that the YAR could begin to export oil within two years. Revenues from oil could make the YAR independent of foreign aid but the development of the resource may bring it into conflict (or closer co-operation) with Saudi Arabia and the PDRY if the Alef field overlaps their territory. Saudi Arabia, for its part, would have no need of further oil and has an interest in preventing the YAR from becoming too independent or, conversely, growing closer to the PDRY, and might obstruct the field's development. In January 1985 the YAR and the PDRY agreed to specify a common region for the joint exploitation of natural resources.

Transport and Communications

There are no railways in the YAR. Roads are being developed with assistance from the USA, the USSR and the People's Republic of China. There are highways from Hodeida to Sana'a and from Moka to Taiz and Sana'a. Hodeida port has been considerably extended with Soviet aid. A direct road runs from Taiz to Sana'a. Yemen Airways operate both internal and external services, and Sana'a international airport is to be developed, with financial assistance from Saudi Arabia through the Saudi–Yemen Co-ordination Council.

Social Welfare

Health services are being continually improved. By 1980 there were 60 hospitals and health centres, offering 4,141 beds.

Education

Education before the revolution was in private hands, but the Government has established state-run schools, and by 1980 enrolment in primary, intermediate and general secondary schools had reached almost 450,000.

Tourism

Tourism increased in the late 1970s, and a joint tourism company was formed with the PDRY in 1980. A total of 42,235 tourists visited the Yemen Arab Republic in 1983 according to the General Tourism Corporation. Revenue from tourism totalled US $16.1m.

Public Holidays

1985: 13 June (Corrective Movement Anniversary), 20 June* (Id ul Fitr, end of Ramadan), 27 August* (Id ul Adha, Feast of the Sacrifice), 16 September* (Islamic New Year), 26 September (Revolution Day), 14 October (PDRY National Day), 25 November* (Mouloud, Birth of the Prophet).

1986: 7 April (Leilat al Meiraj, Ascension of the Prophet).

Directory

The Constitution

On 19 June 1974 the Military Command Council, which had assumed power six days previously, published the following provisional constitution:

In the name of the people, the Chairman of the Command Council, having taken cognizance of Command Council Proclamation No. 1 for 1974, Command Council Proclamation No. 4 for 1974 suspending the Constitution, and Command Council Proclamation No. 5 for 1974 increasing the membership of the Command Council, and desiring to consolidate the bases of authority during the transitional period and to regulate the rights and duties of all employees in a manner conducive to fruitful production to raise the country to the level which we all hope it will attain, we announce in the name of the people that during the transitional period the country will be governed in accordance with the following rules:

GENERAL PRINCIPLES: THE STATE

Article 1: Yemen is an Arab, Islamic and independent state enjoying full sovereignty. Its system is republican. The Yemeni people are a part of the Arab nation.

Article 2: The people are the source of all authority.

Article 3: Islam is the state religion and Arabic the official state language.

Article 4: The Islamic Sharia is the source of all laws.

Article 5: Yemen is an indivisible whole and its defence is the sacred duty of all citizens.

RIGHTS AND DUTIES

Article 6: Yemenis have equal rights and general duties.

Article 7: Personal freedom is guaranteed in accordance with the provisions of the law.

Article 8: There shall be no crime and no penalty except as laid down by law and there shall be no penalty for acts except those committed after the promulgation of the law (applying to them).

Article 9: Homes are inviolate: it is therefore inadmissible to enter them except in such instances as prescribed by the law.

Article 10: The confiscation of funds is prohibited, except within the confines of the law.

Article 11: No person's property shall be expropriated except in the public interest, in the instances prescribed by the law, and with just compensation to the person.

Article 12: The citizens have the right to express their thoughts by means of speech, writing or voting within the confines of the law.

Article 13: Places of worship and learning have immunity which cannot be violated except in instances required by security needs and as prescribed by the law.

THE SYSTEM OF GOVERNMENT

Article 14: The Chairman of the Command Council shall assume the function of general sovereignty, particularly in taking the measures he deems necessary to protect the revolution and the republican regime.

Article 15: The Command Council shall assume the functions of the legislative and executive authorities of the state. It shall also have the power to lay down general policy and define its general framework.

Article 16: The Government is the executive and administrative body responsible for carrying out the state's general policy as laid down by the Command Council.

Article 17: The judiciary is independent, and there shall be no authority over it except for the law. Its verdicts shall be handed down and executed in accordance with the principles of the Sharia.

CONCLUDING RULES

Article 18: All the rules determined by the laws, bylaws and decisions prior to the issuance of this constitutional declaration shall remain in force unless they conflict with the rules of this declaration or unless they are amended or revoked.

Article 19: During the transitional period action shall be taken to restore constitutional and democratic life on sound bases in view of the need to provide the Yemeni people with a dignified life and a bright future.

Article 20: This constitutional declaration shall come into force from the date of its issuance and it shall be published in the Official Gazette.

In February 1978 a 99-member Constituent People's Assembly was appointed by the Command Council to (i) propose the form of the presidency; (ii) amend the constitution; (iii) carry out various functions related to the eventual holding of parliamentary elections; (iv) review and give recommendations on the budget, domestic and foreign affairs, draft laws, etc. In April the Command Council was dissolved. In May 1979 the Constituent People's Assembly was increased to 159 members and a 15-member Consultative Council was set up. In May 1980 a 52-member Committee for National Consultation was set up to prepare for a General People's Congress. The Congress met in August and September 1982, and consisted of 700 elected and 300 appointed members. It agreed a new National Charter and elected a Permanent Committee, with five sub-committees. The General People's Congress will meet every two years and be re-elected every four years. The Constituent People's Assembly continues to meet.

Transport

RAILWAYS

There are no railways in the YAR.

ROADS

There are about 1,276 km of main roads, 834 km of secondary roads and 13,500 km of other roads. Highways run from Hodeida to Sana'a, and from Moka to Taiz, Ibb and Sana'a. A highway from Sana'a to Saada was opened in May 1977, while one of 172 km from Sana'a to Marib was completed in May 1984. A 65-km road is to be built from Taiz to Al-Mafraq.

SHIPPING

Hodeida is a Red Sea port of some importance, and the Yemen Navigation Company runs passenger and cargo services to many parts of the Middle East and Africa.

Ports and Marine Affairs Corporation: POB 3183, Hodeida; tel. 79034; telex 5665.

THE PEOPLE'S DEMOCRATIC REPUBLIC OF YEMEN

Introductory Survey

Location, Climate, Language, Religion, Flag, Capital

The People's Democratic Republic of Yemen lies on the southern shore of the Arabian peninsula, with the Yemen Arab Republic to the north-west, Saudi Arabia to the north, and Oman to the east. The islands of Perim and Kamaran at the southern end of the Red Sea are also part of the Republic. The climate is very hot and humid in the summer, with temperatures rising to 54°C (130°F). Winters are cold in upland areas. Rainfall is very low, averaging less than 3 in (75 mm) a year. Arabic is spoken and most of the population are Muslims. The national flag (proportions 3 by 2) has horizontal stripes of red, white and black, with a light blue triangle, containing a five-pointed red star, at the hoist. The capital is Aden.

Recent History

The People's Republic of Southern Yemen was formed on 30 November 1967, comprising Aden and the former Protectorate of South Arabia. Aden had been under British rule since 1839 and the Protectorate was developed by a series of treaties between the United Kingdom and local leaders. Prior to British withdrawal, two rival factions, the National Liberation Front (NLF) and the Front for the Liberation of Occupied South Yemen (FLOSY), fought for control. The Marxist NLF eventually won and assumed power as the National Front (NF). The country's first President, Qahtan ash-Sha'abi, was forced out of office in June 1969, when a Presidential Council, led by Salem Rubayi Ali, took power. Muhammad Ali Haitham became Prime Minister. In November 1970, on the third anniversary of independence, the country was renamed the People's Democratic Republic of Yemen (PDRY). In May 1971 a Provisional Supreme People's Council (SPC) was established as the national legislature. In August 1971 Haitham was replaced as Prime Minister by Ali Nasser Muhammad.

Following independence, more than 300,000 Southern Yemenis fled to North Yemen, the Yemen Arab Republic (YAR), when the NF started rounding up dissident elements. A polarization of interests by then existed, with the YAR establishing closer ties with the West and receiving aid from Saudi Arabia and Libya, while the extreme left-wing regime in the PDRY began receiving aid from the People's Republic of China and the USSR. There were clashes with Saudi Arabia in 1969 and intermittent fighting with mercenaries from the YAR on the border between the two Yemens in 1971. This erupted into open war in October 1972 but, at a meeting in Cairo later in the month, both sides proposed a union of the two Yemens. A draft agreement to this effect was signed but never implemented. In October 1975 the ruling NF merged with two smaller parties to form the United Political Organization-National Front (UPO-NF).

The proposed union of the two Yemens seemed to have been rendered impossible when President Ahmed ibn Hussein al-Ghashmi of the YAR was assassinated in June 1978 by a bomb carried in the suitcase of a PDRY envoy. In the subsequent wave of recriminations, President Rubayi Ali of the PDRY was deposed and executed by opponents within the UPO-NF. The Prime Minister, Ali Nasser Muhammad, became interim Head of State. Two days after the overthrow of Rubayi Ali, it was announced that the three parties within the UPO-NF had agreed to form a Marxist-Leninist 'vanguard' party. The constituent congress of the new Yemen Socialist Party (YSP) was held in October, when Abdul Fattah Ismail became Secretary-General. A new SPC was elected in December and appointed Ismail to be Head of State. In April 1980 the Prime Minister, Ali Nasser Muhammad, replaced Ismail as Head of State, Chairman of the Presidium of the SPC and Secretary-General of the YSP. Ali Nasser Muhammad's position was consolidated in October 1980, when his posts were confirmed at an Extraordinary Congress of the YSP.

Tension in the whole Gulf and southern Arabian region was increased in October 1979, when the PDRY signed a 20-year Treaty of Friendship and Co-operation with the USSR, which empowers the USSR to station up to 18,000 troops in the PDRY. The growing relationship with the USSR had internal repercussions as well. During the spring of 1981, a potential rival to Ali Nasser Muhammad, Brig. Ali Ahmad Nasser Antar, was removed from his post as Minister of Defence, apparently because he had refused to take orders from Soviet advisers. He was later given the post of First Deputy Prime Minister, which removed him from his power base in the army. In April 1982 the PDRY signed an aid agreement with the USSR. Some relief of regional tension was indicated when the PDRY and Oman signed an agreement in Kuwait in October 1982 on the 'normalization' of relations. Full diplomatic relations between the PDRY and Oman were officially established in October 1983. The PDRY exchanged Ambassadors with Saudi Arabia in July 1983, for the first time since 1977. The divergence of their ideologies has led to frequent border clashes, and the upgrading of diplomatic relations did not prevent further fighting in January 1984.

Friction between the YAR and the PDRY, following the assassination of President al-Ghashmi, built up to large-scale fighting in February and March 1979, when the PDRY supported an insurrection in the YAR by the National Democratic Front (NDF), and it was therefore a surprise when, following the intervention of the Arab League to secure a cease-fire, an agreement was signed in Kuwait on 29 March between the two Heads of State, pledging complete union of the two Yemens. Meetings between representatives of the two countries produced few apparent results until December 1981, when both sides signed a draft constitution for a unified state and established a joint YAR/PDRY Yemen Council to monitor progress towards unification. However, further fighting occurred in 1982 and the NDF forces were forced over the border into the PDRY, where they remain in a semi-organized state. In May 1982 Dr Abdul Karim al-Iryani, then Prime Minister of the YAR, claimed that another dissident group, the Popular Unity Party of Yemen (a group formed in Aden in February 1982), which he described as '100% Marxist-Leninist', was receiving arms and supplies from the PDRY. Despite these events, the two Yemens continued their talks concerning the need for 'security, peace and stability'. The first session of the joint Yemen Council was held in Sana'a (YAR) in August 1983, and the second in Aden in February 1984. The sessions are to continue at intervals of six months, the venue alternating between Aden and Sana'a.

Ali Nasser Muhammad resigned as Prime Minister on 14 February 1985, nominating the Minister of Construction, Haydar Abu Bakr al-Attas, as his successor. Ali Nasser Muhammad retained his other senior posts but, in the ministerial reshuffle which followed his resignation, Brig. Ali Ahmad Nasser Antar lost his post as First Deputy Prime Minister.

Government

Under the 1970 Constitution, legislative power is vested in the unicameral Supreme People's Council (SPC), comprising 111 elected members. The SPC which was elected in December 1978 consists of 71 members of the Yemen Socialist Party and 40 independents. The SPC appoints a Presidium, whose Chairman is Head of State, and also appoints the Council of Ministers. The Yemen Socialist Party is the only legal political party. The country is divided into six (formerly eight) administrative governorates comprising 28 provinces.

Defence

In July 1984 armed forces totalled 27,500 men: 24,000 in the army, 2,500 in the air force and 1,000 in the navy. Defence expenditure in 1982 was an estimated 55.1m. dinars. There is a two-year period of military service.

Economic Affairs

Prior to independence, the economy of the area depended, to a considerable extent, on revenues from Aden, an important free port which also benefited from the British forces' expenditure. The political troubles which preceded independence brought about a decline in tourism, and the closure of the Suez Canal in 1967 greatly reduced shipping traffic generally. The major petroleum refinery in Aden also suffered initially, but later recovered, owing to demand from Egypt, following the destruction of the Suez refinery.

The economy has otherwise declined since independence, but the reopening of the Suez Canal in June 1975 and an improvement scheme for the Port of Aden are having beneficial effects. British aid ceased in 1968, but aid from several Communist and Arab countries has supported the economy. In recent years, remittances from emigrant workers have helped to stimulate business. All important foreign business enterprises, except the BP refinery, were nationalized in November 1969, and the BP refinery was nationalized in the spring of 1977. The British-built refinery remains the country's main industrial unit, accounting for more than 80% of the total industrial output, and in 1983 it renewed refining agreements with Iran and Kuwait. The State's dominance of the economy (it accounts for 64% of industrial and 56% of total output) results partly from its control of the refinery. Six foreign contractors are bidding for a US $25m. scheme to upgrade the refinery (including the addition of an asphalt plant with a capacity of 100,000 tons per year), and there has been much foreign interest in the country's nascent petroleum production industry, which might ultimately reduce the PDRY's dependence on foreign aid. The PDRY has to import all of the petroleum that it refines at Aden. The Government intends to give priority to petroleum prospecting and has offered favourable terms to foreign oil companies. During 1983 alone, the Government planned to spend US $40m. on oil exploration, and total investment in the petroleum industry between 1980 and 1983 was reported to have been $86.9m. Agip was the first company to discover petroleum in potentially commercial quantities, at its onshore concession in 1983. To take account of the country's new interests, a Ministry of Energy and Minerals was formed in February 1985.

The hinterland depends on subsistence agriculture and fishing; the rich fishing grounds of the Arabian Sea are the country's greatest potential source of wealth after oil. Most of the country's 10,000 fishermen are active only in territorial waters, their equipment is often poor, and efficient marketing is prohibited by the present state of communications. The importance of the fisheries sector has been reflected in the level of investment afforded to it in successive national development plans. The first (three-year) plan (1971–74) allocated 7% of total investment to the fishing industry, and the first five-year plan (1974–79) 13.7%. Investment in fishing fell to 5% in the 1980–85 plan, but in absolute terms the amount has risen from YD 2.3m. ($6.7m.) in the 1971–74 plan to YD 26.8m. in the first five-year plan, and YD 38.2m. in the second. However, from a peak of 162,000 tons in 1977, the annual catch fell to 48,000 tons in 1978 and, after climbing again to 89,700 tons, fell back to 66,000 tons in 1982. Some cotton is grown, and coffee, tea, cocoa and spices are also important exports. The 1980–85 Five-Year Plan envisages expenditure of YD 425m., about a quarter of which has been allocated to electricity and water projects. The budget for 1984 allocated YD 328.5m. for government expenditure (of which YD 132.1m. was to be devoted to investment) and predicted income of YD 213.1m.

In 1983 the trade deficit fell slightly to YD 251.1m. ($726.9m.) from YD 253.3m. ($733.3m.) in 1982. GDP increased by 9% from YD 415.8m. ($1,203m.) in 1982 to YD 453.9m. ($1,314m.) in 1983.

Transport and Communications

Before the Suez Canal was closed in 1967, Aden was the principal port of call between Europe and the Persian Gulf, India and the Far East. It was hoped that, with the reopening of the canal in June 1975, Aden would regain that position, but recovery has been slow. In 1977 the port handled about 30% of the net registered tonnage of 1966, the year before the closure of the Suez Canal. There are also good international air services. Few roads exist inland, but a new road has been built, with massive Chinese aid, between Aden and Mukalla.

Social Welfare

The number of hospitals and health centres increased from 15 in 1969 to 51 in 1982. In 1980 there were 258 physicians. Emphasis has been given to developing local health centres.

Education

In 1984 there were 28 kindergartens, 900 primary schools and 51 secondary schools, 21 institutes of further education, including one university in Aden (founded in 1975), and 10 teacher-training colleges. The number of students rose from 65,000 in 1967 to 338,000 in the 1983/84 academic year, including 58,000 students in nomads' schools. All state fees for education were abolished in 1974.

Tourism

Tourism was allocated YD 20m. under the 1981–85 Plan, and a joint tourism company has been set up with North Yemen.

Public Holidays

1985: 20 June* (Id ul Fitr, end of Ramadan), 27 August* (Id ul Adha, Feast of the Sacrifice), 16 September* (Islamic New Year), 25 September* (Ashoura), 14 October (National Day), 25 November* (Mouloud, Birth of the Prophet).

1986: 7 April* (Leilat al Meiraj, Ascension of the Prophet).

* Islamic holidays, dependent on the lunar calendar, may vary slightly from the dates given.

Weights and Measures

The imperial system is generally used in Aden, while the rest of the country still uses local weights and measures.

The Constitution

Before the 1970 constitution was drawn up, existing ordinances and regulations remained in force, with presidential authority replacing the powers of the British and Federal governments. The National Front general command, which had 41 members, formed the interim legislative authority. The country is divided into six (formerly eight) administrative governorates. The two-year term of office granted to the National Front expired on 30 November 1969, and was formally renewed for another year. Following the adoption of the new constitution on 30 November 1970, a provisional Supreme People's Council of 101 selected members took over legislative powers. Amendments to the constitution, allowing for the formation of the Yemen Socialist Party, were approved by the Supreme People's Council in October 1978. General elections took place in December 1978 for a 111-member council which subsequently elected a presidium, whose chairman became head of state. In March 1979 a constitutional commission from both the People's Democratic Republic of Yemen and the Yemen Arab Republic was appointed to draw up a constitution for a unified state. It is expected that a 136-article constitution would be the basis of the unified state.

ZAIRE

Introductory Survey

Location, Climate, Language, Religion, Flag, Capital

The Republic of Zaire lies in central Africa, bordered by the Congo to the north-west, by the Central African Republic and Sudan to the north, by Uganda, Rwanda, Burundi and Tanzania to the east and by Zambia and Angola to the south. There is a short coastline at the outlet of the River Zaire (Congo). The climate is tropical, with an average temperature of 27°C (80°F) and an annual rainfall of 150 to 200 cm. French is the official language. Over 400 Sudanese and Bantu dialects are spoken, Kiswahili, Kiluba, Kikongo and Lingala being the most widespread. African religions are based on traditional beliefs. About 48% of the population are nominally Catholic, and 13% nominally Protestant. The flag is green with a central yellow disc in which a black hand holds a torch with a red flame. The capital is Kinshasa (formerly Léopoldville).

Recent History

Zaire, formerly called the Belgian Congo, became independent from Belgium as the Republic of the Congo on 30 June 1960. Five days later the armed forces mutinied. Belgian actions during the disorder that followed and its support for the secession of Katanga (now Shaba) province were condemned in the UN, and UN troops were sent to the Congo to maintain order. Disagreements between the Congo's Head of State, Joseph Kasavubu, and the Prime Minister, Patrice Lumumba, over the issues of Katangan secession and the intervention of UN troops led to the dismissal of Lumumba in September. The Government was taken over temporarily by Col (later Gen. and, from December 1982, Marshal) Joseph-Désiré Mobutu. Lumumba was imprisoned in December but his supporters set up a rival government in Stanleyville (Kisangani) which controlled Orientale, Kivu and northern parts of Kasai and Katanga. Mobutu returned power to President Kasavubu in February 1961, but a few days later the murder of Lumumba was announced. The strong reactions to this in Africa and the UN led to negotiations between Kasavubu and the followers of Lumumba which eventually produced a new government, with Cyrille Adoula as Prime Minister, in August. Katangan secession ended only in January 1963 with the Katanga leader Moïse Tshombe going into exile. The Katangan rebel gendarmes who followed him formed the Congolese National Liberation Front (FNLC) in 1963, and later served with the Marxist Popular Movement for the Liberation of Angola (MPLA).

During 1962 the Lumumbists left the government, which later assumed full powers, closing the legislature, and arresting opposition elements. Early in 1964 revolt flared up in Kwilu under Pierre Mulele. In July Kasavubu appointed Tshombe as an interim Prime Minister pending elections, and in August the country was renamed the Democratic Republic of the Congo. Early in 1965 the revolt crumbled. The struggle between Tshombe and Kasavubu for the new post of President brought about the seizure of power by the army under Mobutu, at the head of the 'Second Republic', on 24 November 1965. The new regime was quickly approved by the Chamber of Representatives, and in June 1967 a new constitution was adopted. In 1970 Gen. Mobutu was elected President (unopposed) and took office for a seven-year term. In January 1972 he became known as Mobutu Sese Seko. In October 1971 the Democratic Republic of the Congo became the Republic of Zaire, and a year later the Government of Zaire and the Executive Committee of the Mouvement populaire de la révolution (MPR), Zaire's sole legal political party, merged into the National Executive Council.

Zaire was involved for a number of years with the struggle for independence in Angola and intensified its support for the FNLA (National Front for the Liberation of Angola) in 1975. However, following the victory of the MPLA in early 1976, Zaire broke off relations with the FNLA and acknowledged the new regime. In March 1977 and May 1978 the FNLC invaded Zaire from Angola, taking much of the region of Shaba, but were repulsed on both occasions by the Zairian army, which had Western support. In October 1978 Mobutu and President Neto of Angola agreed not to support rebels against each other.

The invasion of 1977 had prompted Mobutu to introduce a number of political reforms among which was the holding of direct elections, under a new electoral code, in October 1977, and in December President Mobutu was re-elected for a further seven-year term. Following criticism of the National Executive Council by the Legislative Council, Mobutu appointed a new government in March 1979, with Bo-Boliko Lokonga, former head of the Legislative Council, as First State Commissioner. In January 1980, as part of a massive anti-corruption drive, Mobutu completely reorganized the National Executive Council, dismissing 13 of the 22 Commissioners.

In a series of political reforms in August 1980, the new post of Chairman of the MPR, to be held by the President of the MPR, became the central organ of decision-making and control of the Party's activities. In September President Mobutu appointed a 114-member Central Committee to become the MPR's most important organ after the Congress. The MPR's Executive Committee became the Executive Secretariat and, in a ministerial reshuffle, the outgoing First State Commissioner, Bo-Boliko Lokonga, was appointed Executive Secretary.

In April 1981 the First State Commissioner, Nguza Karl-I-Bond, went into self-imposed exile on a trip to Belgium. He was replaced by N'Singa Udjuu Ongwakebi Untube, who also became Executive Secretary of the MPR when the posts were merged in October 1981 during a series of political changes, which included the decision to elect the Party's Politbureau from the Central Committee. In 1982 opposition to Zaire's one-party system of government crystallized in attempts to establish a second party in Zaire, in connection with which 13 members of the National Legislative Council were imprisoned, and in the formation in October of the Congolese Front for the Restoration of Democracy, a coalition of opposition parties for which Nguza Karl-I-Bond was the spokesman. Kengo Wa Dondo was appointed First State Commissioner in a ministerial reshuffle in November 1982.

In May 1983, following the publication of a highly critical report on Zaire by the human rights organization, Amnesty International, Mobutu offered an amnesty to all political exiles who returned to Zaire by 30 June. A number of exiles accepted the offer, including Mungul Diaka, leader of the Council for the Liberation of the Congo, but a substantial opposition movement remained in Belgium. The 13 imprisoned members of the National Legislative Council were released in May; their fate was not known for certain, but Mobutu claimed at a press conference in Belgium, in July 1984, that five of them had accompanied him on his trip. Opposition to Mobutu's regime continued to manifest itself in Zaire during 1984: in January and March a number of bombs exploded in Kinshasa, causing loss of life, and a rebel force occupied the town of Moba, in Shaba province, for two days in November, before it was recaptured by Zairian troops. Zaire accused Belgium of harbouring the groups responsible for such violent opposition, and claimed that the rebels had crossed into Zaire from neighbouring Tanzania. However, the main opposition groups in Belgium did not acknowledge involvement in the occupation of Moba, suggesting instead that rebellious Zairian troops had been responsible. It was widely believed that the violent opposition in Zaire had been orchestrated in order to disrupt the proceedings for the election and inauguration of the country's President, which were due to take place in 1984. However, Mobutu was re-elected to the post without hindrance in July, and was inaugurated in December. A reduction by one-third of the number of members of the Central Committee of the MPR, from 120 to 80, in January 1985, and a major ministerial reshuffle in February, followed an announcement by the President that, with the exception of himself and the First State Commissioner, nobody might concurrently be involved in government and be a member of the Central Committee.

Zaire's relations with several Muslim countries deteriorated when diplomatic links with Israel were restored in May 1982. However, the success of the Conference of France and African States, held in Kinshasa in October 1982, was seen to reinforce Zaire's standing in Africa. In July 1983 Zaire sent 2,000 troops to Chad to support the government of President Habré in his country's civil war, but it was reported in October 1984 that this force, now numbering about 1,000 men, was soon to be withdrawn following an agreement on the departure from Chad of Libyan troops, which were opposed to Habré, and French forces. In June 1984 Mobutu advocated the creation of an organization of Sub-Saharan African states, with a role which was not to be incompatible with that of the Organization of African Unity (OAU, which embraces nearly all African countries) but which, rather, was to complement the role of the League of Arab States (whose membership is drawn from countries in the Middle East and North Africa).

Government

Under the Constitution promulgated in February 1978, legislative power is held by the unicameral National Legislative Council, with 310 members elected for five years by universal adult suffrage. Since 1970 the only authorized political party is the ruling Mouvement populaire de la révolution (MPR). Executive power is vested in the President, directly elected for seven years. He appoints and leads the National Executive Council, a cabinet of State Commissioners with departmental responsibilities. The MPR's highest policy-making body is the 80-member Central Committee. The Political Bureau has 14 members, elected by the Central Committee. The President is advised on questions of security by a National Security Council formed in March 1979. Zaire comprises eight Regions, each headed by an appointed Commissioner, and the capital city of Kinshasa, under a Governor.

Defence

Military service is compulsory. In July 1984 armed forces totalled 26,000, of whom 22,000 were in the army, 2,500 in the air force and 1,500 in the navy. There is also a paramilitary force, the Gendarmerie, of about 22,000. Defence expenditure for 1980 totalled 419.0m. zaires.

Economic Affairs

Potentially one of Africa's richest states, Zaire has extensive agricultural, mineral and energy resources. The country's chief riches lie in the Shaba copper mines and in extensive deposits of cobalt, of which Zaire has 65% of the world's reserves. Manganese, zinc, uranium, tin and other metals are also mined. The rich diamond deposits in Kasai make Zaire the world's largest producer. In 1981 the marketing monopoly for Zaire's diamonds was taken over by SOZACOM, the state-controlled company responsible for marketing the country's mineral output, after 14 years of selling through the Central Selling Organisation (CSO), controlled by De Beers of South Africa. In March 1983 Zaire reverted to the former marketing arrangement with the CSO, and in August 1984 SOZACOM was dissolved as part of a move to make mining companies responsible for the sale of their own products. Mineral products accounted for 75% of export earnings in 1982, while the contribution of mining and metallurgy to GDP was about 11.5%.

With refineries at Matadi and Moanda, extensive offshore petroleum reserves have been exploited since 1975, and production in late 1984 was reported to be 30,000 barrels per day; transport is to be facilitated by the new deep-water port planned for Banana. Zaire has vast hydroelectric potential, with thermal power accounting for only 1% of installed capacity. A large-scale aluminium smelter, with an annual capacity of 212,000 metric tons, is to be built at Banana to exploit the output of the Inga hydroelectric complex near Kinshasa.

Principal agricultural products are coffee, palm oil and kernels, and rubber, which are the prime agricultural exports, and timber, cassava and bananas. Agricultural production has been declining since 1970, partly because of the collapse of the road system, and food imports have risen in consequence. In 1982 details were announced of an Agricultural Investment Programme for 1982–84 which aimed initially to expand production of certain basic foodstuffs for home consumption and, in its second and third phases, to increase production of industrial crops and export crops respectively. The Programme called for greater participation in agriculture by the private sector. The export of agricultural products was reported to have increased by about 6% in 1984.

Following nationalization of the country's mining interests in the mid-1960s, a policy of 'Zairization' was adopted in 1973, under which most foreign companies were nationalized. Since 1976, however, President Mobutu has offered to restore a number of enterprises to the private sector.

In 1976 the Economic Community of the Great Lakes Countries (CEPGL) was established by Zaire, Burundi and Rwanda, all of whom were signatories in 1974 to the Lomé Convention. The EEC remains the chief trading partner, with Belgium-Luxembourg taking 60% of exports and providing 31% of imports in 1980.

Industry has been working well below installed capacity, being affected by a number of adverse conditions, including problems connected with transport and the import of capital equipment and spare parts, which often have to be paid for several months in advance of their delivery. However, manufacturing industry was reported to have expanded by 4% in 1984.

Inflation and the deep-rooted corruption of the Government have caused Zaire difficulty with its balance of payments and servicing of foreign debts. Coffee, gold, diamonds and ivory were still being smuggled out of the country on a massive scale in 1983, and fraud and the inadequacy of customs control had reached such proportions that the Government declared in 1979 that the import figures no longer reflected reality.

Despite foreign aid and the intervention of the IMF, the country's total external debt at the end of 1983 was estimated at about $4,100m. In an attempt to revive the economy, a three-year credit facility for $1,200m. was arranged with the IMF in June 1981, but this was suspended in February 1982 because Zaire had failed to meet performance targets. In September 1983 the Government introduced a severe austerity programme, including reductions in public spending and a devaluation of the zaire by 77.5%, to its black-market value; the devaluation had the immediate effect both of combating the unofficial economy and of causing high inflation, which had earlier been reduced from 125% in 1978 to about 35% in 1982. However, falling prices for copper and cobalt, Zaire's main exports, are expected to hinder any substantial reduction of the debts. After a period of regular debt repayments had been completed during 1983, an agreement was reached in December, with the so-called 'Paris Club' of Zaire's creditor nations, that arrears of payments accumulated in 1983, together with those due in 1984, would be rescheduled for payment over 11 years, and the IMF approved loans to Zaire of 342.5m. SDRs ($359.6m), to be paid in instalments over 15 months, beginning in January 1984. At the end of 1984 Zaire's total external debt remained at about $4,000m., but the IMF pronounced itself pleased with the country's progress during that year: government spending had stayed within the limits prescribed by the IMF in 1983, GDP had grown by 2.5% and was forecast to rise by about 5% in 1985, and inflation had been reduced from 101% in 1983 (when it had been influenced partly by the devaluation of the zaire in September) to less than 20%. With the encouragement of the IMF, the Government announced in 1984 that a five-year development plan would be drawn up, for implementation in 1986–90.

Transport and Communications

Transport flows for the most part along the River Zaire and its tributaries, Zairian rivers being navigable above the Inga rapids for 13,700 km. The chief ports are Matadi, which is the highest point on the Zaire accessible from the sea, and Boma. Studies for a deep-water port at Banana, on the Atlantic coast, were due to be completed in 1984, and the world's longest road-rail suspension bridge, spanning the River Zaire at Matadi, was opened in 1983. This is the first stage of a railway construction programme to link the CFMK Kinshasa–Matadi line to the future Matadi–Banana line, thus providing the only direct land route between Mayumbe and the rest of the country. In 1984 railways totalled 5,252 km, of which 858 km were electrified.

Most roads are in poor condition. In 1980 they totalled about 145,000 km of which 20,683 km were main or national roads. There are four international airports—at Ndjili (for Kinshasa), at Luano (for Lubumbashi), at Bukavu and at Kisangani.

Social Welfare

There is an Institut National de la Sécurité Sociale guaranteeing insurance coverage for sickness, pensions and family allowances under an obligatory scheme of national insurance. In 1979 Zaire had 942 hospitals, with a total of 79,244 beds, and 1,900 physicians.

Education

In 1978 there were 5,200,000 pupils in primary education, 680,000 in secondary, and 35,000 in higher. In 1974 a one-year period of compulsory civic service, including military, political and agricultural training, was introduced for all school-leavers. Since then, all religious education has been abolished. It is estimated that about 70% of children aged six to 11 years attended primary schools in 1978. In 1975 11% of those aged 12 to 17 received secondary education. There are three universities in Zaire, but in 1985 plans were announced for the construction of a fourth, at Kananga.

Tourism

Zaire has extensive lake and mountain scenery. Tourism expanded steadily under a plan announced in 1968, but there was a sharp drop in the number of visitors from 93,682 in 1974 to only 18,942 in 1976, although arrivals rose to 25,600 in 1978.

Public Holidays

1985: 1 May (Labour Day), 20 May (Anniversary of the Mouvement populaire de la révolution), 24 June (Anniversary of Zaire currency, Promulgation of the 1967 Constitution and Day of the Fishermen), 30 June (Independence Day), 1 August (Parents' Day), 14 October (Youth Day, birthday of President Mobutu), 27 October (Anniversary of the country's change of name to Zaire), 17 November (Army Day), 24 November (Anniversary of the Second Republic), 25 December (Christmas Day).

1986: 1 January (New Year's Day), 4 January (Commemoration of the Martyrs of Independence).

Directory

The Constitution

Promulgated on 15 February 1978.

The Republic of Zaire is defined as a united, democratic, secular and social state, composed of eight administrative regions and the city of Kinshasa.

HEAD OF STATE

The President of the Republic is elected for a seven-year term, renewable once only. The Presidency of the Republic follows automatically election to the leadership of the Mouvement populaire de la révolution (MPR), the sole political party, and approval of this choice by the electorate. Candidates must be natives of Zaire and aged over 40. Under the revised Constitution, the Head of State is also the Head of the National Executive Council and of the National Legislative Council and acts as the chief executive, controls foreign policy and the judiciary, and is Commander-in-Chief of the armed forces and the gendarmerie.

EXECUTIVE POWER

The programme and decisions of the National Executive Council are determined by the President and carried out by the State Commissioners who are heads of their departments. The National Executive Council is dissolved at the end of each Presidential term, though it continues to function until a new National Executive Council is formed. The members of the National Executive Council are appointed or dismissed by the President.

LEGISLATURE

The legislature consists of a single Chamber, the National Legislative Council; its 310 members are designated People's Commissioners, and are elected for five years by direct, universal suffrage with a secret ballot. Candidates must be natives of Zaire and aged over 25. The Bureau of the National Legislative Council is elected for the duration of the legislature, and consists of the President, two Vice-Presidents and two Secretaries. The members of the National Executive Council have the right and, if required, the obligation to attend the meetings of the National Legislative Council. It meets twice yearly, from April to July and from October to January.

POLITICAL PARTIES

In May 1967 it was resolved that the MPR should be Zaire's only party. The Political Bureau* of the MPR, in its function of nominating and electing the Head of State, is, in effect, the supreme organ of state. It consists of 38 members elected from the party's

* According to a draft bill to amend the Constitution passed in November 1980, power stemming from the people is exercised by the President of the MPR, the President of the Republic, by other institutions of the MPR, or by referendum. The number of institutions of the MPR increases from five to eight with the creation of the post of Chairman of the MPR (the Chairman is the central institution of the MPR for decision-making) and the establishment of a Central Committee (which takes precedence over the Political Bureau) and an Executive Committee.

Central Committee. Candidates must be natives of Zaire and aged over 35 years.

REGIONAL GOVERNMENTS

The regional commissioners of the eight regions are appointed and dismissed by the President.

JUDICIARY

The Judicial Council†, one of the organs of the MPR, consists of the Supreme Court, the General Council of War, the Court of State Security, the Tribunals and the Council of War. The President appoints a magistrate to preside over the Judicial Council.

FUNDAMENTAL RIGHTS AND DUTIES

All citizens are equal before the law, irrespective of social class, religion, tribe, sex, birth or residence. All citizens are members of the MPR, have the duty to uphold the revolution and have the right to vote at the age of 18. Every person shall enjoy the rights of personal respect, protection of life and inviolability of person. No person may be arrested, detained, executed or subjected to torture or inhuman or degrading treatment except within the prescribed form of the law. All citizens are entitled to freedom of expression, conscience and religion. Military service is compulsory but may be replaced by community service. All citizens of Zaire have the right and duty to work, and can defend their rights by trade union action. The right to strike is recognized and is exercised according to laws.

† In January 1980 a Justice Department was set up to replace the Judicial Council (see Judicial System, p. 2916).

RAILWAYS

Total length of railways in 1984 was 5,252 km, including 858 km of electrified rail. The main line runs from Lubumbashi to Ilebo. An extension to Kinshasa is under construction which will join the link to Matadi. In December 1974 the companies of KDL, CFL, CFMK, CFM and CVZ were amalgamated to form Zaire National Railways, SNCZ. ONATRA remained autonomous, under its own director-general. International connections run to Dar es Salaam (Tanzania) and Lobito (Angola), and also connect with the Zambian, Zimbabwean, Mozambican and South African systems.

Société Nationale des Chemins de Fer Zaïrois (SNCZ): place de la Gare, BP 297, Lubumbashi (Shaba); tel. 92-393; f. 1974; administers all internal railway sections as well as river transport and transport on Lakes Tanganyika and Kivu; Pres. and Gen. ROADS

In 1980 there were approximately 145,000 km of roads, of which 20,683 km were main roads. In general road conditions are poor, owing to inadequate maintenance.

INLAND WATERWAYS

For over 1,600 km the River Zaire (Congo) is navigable. Above the Stanley Falls the Zaire changes its name to Lualaba, and is used for shipping on a 965-km stretch from Bubundu to Kindu and Kongolo to Bukama. (There is a railway from Matadi, the principal port on the lower Zaire, to Kinshasa.) The total length of inland waterways is 13,700 km.

East African Railways and Harbours: services on Lake Mobutu Sese Seko.

Office National des Transports au Zaïre (ONATRA): blvd du 30 juin 177, BP 98, Kinshasa I; Regd Office BP 16.696, Kinshasa I; operates 12,174 km of waterways, 502 km of railways and road transport; controls ports of Kinshasa, Matadi, Boma and Banana; Chair. and Gen. Man. H. Paelinck.

ZAMBIA

Introductory Survey

Location, Climate, Language, Religion, Flag, Capital

The Republic of Zambia is a land-locked state in southern central Africa, bordered to the north by Tanzania and Zaire, to the east by Malawi and Mozambique, to the south by Zimbabwe, Botswana and Namibia, and to the west by Angola. The climate is tropical, modified by altitude, with average temperatures from 18° to 24°C (65°–75°F). The official language is English. The principal African languages are Nyanja, Bemba, Tonga, Lozi, Lunda and Luvale. Some Africans follow traditional animist beliefs. Christians make up about 80% of the population and are roughly divided between Protestants and Roman Catholics. Asians are mostly Muslims, with a few Hindus. The national flag (proportions 3 by 2) is green, with a canton in the lower fly having equal red, black and red vertical stripes, surmounted by an osprey in flight. The capital is Lusaka.

Recent History

Two British protectorates, founded in 1899 and 1900, were merged in 1911 to form Northern Rhodesia. In 1924 control of the territory passed from the British South Africa Company to the United Kingdom Government. In 1953 the protectorate joined with Southern Rhodesia (now Zimbabwe) and Nyasaland (now Malawi) to form the Federation of Rhodesia and Nyasaland, which was dissolved in December 1963 in recognition of the unwillingness of the black majority population of Northern Rhodesia and Nyasaland to continue under the domination of white-ruled Southern Rhodesia. Northern Rhodesia became an independent Republic, within the Commonwealth, as Zambia on 24 October 1964. Dr Kenneth Kaunda, leader of the United National Independence Party (UNIP) since 1960, and Prime Minister since January 1964, became the country's first President.

Before the proclamation of a one-party state in December 1972, Zambian politics were characterized by outbreaks of political violence, particularly on the Copperbelt mining area which, with its population of 1.5m., is the largest industrial concentration in Black Africa. The decline of the main opposition party, the African National Congress (ANC), and internal disputes in the governing UNIP led to the formation of the United Progressive Party (UPP) in 1971, but it was banned in 1972 and many of its leaders detained. However, the country united to face the potentially crippling effect of the closure of the border with (Southern) Rhodesia in 1973. At this time, African liberation groups operating from Zambian territory posed a substantial threat to Rhodesia's border. Guerrilla activity increased following the border closure in 1973, leading to more tension with Rhodesia. In 1976 Zambia declared its support for the Patriotic Front, led by Robert Mugabe and Joshua Nkomo.

In October 1978 Kaunda was nominated by the UNIP as sole presidential candidate, following its approval of constitutional changes which effectively eliminated all opposition. The presidential elections, together with elections for the National Assembly, were held in December 1978 and, against a background of severe economic difficulties, Kaunda was returned for a fourth term as President.

With the establishment of an independent Zimbabwe in 1980, many Zambians looked forward to an improvement in their economic conditions and, in particular, to an end to the prolonged and severe shortages of staple commodities. When improvements were not forthcoming, trouble with the trade unions ensued and, in October 1980, there was an attempted coup in which several prominent businessmen, government officials and UNIP members were allegedly involved. Kaunda accused South Africa and 'a number of foreign countries' of promoting the plot. In January 1981 17 trade union leaders were expelled from the UNIP, prompting strikes and rioting in the Copperbelt. They were reinstated in April, but further strikes in July, demanding pay parity with expatriate workers and an end to food shortages, led to the temporary detention of Frederick Chiluba, Chairman of the Zambia Congress of Trade Unions (ZCTU), along with several other trade union leaders. A reshuffle of government ministers and UNIP officials, which followed in January 1982, aimed to strengthen party and government administration. A further reorganization in January 1983 assigned the finance portfolio to the Prime Minister as the economic crisis deepened.

Despite severe economic constraints in 1982 and 1983, Dr Kaunda was convincingly returned as President in the elections of October 1983, gaining 93% of the votes cast. A cabinet reshuffle in December, in which he took over the industry portfolio, confirmed Kaunda's election promise to halt corruption and to recover an economic balance. During 1984 and early 1985 reforms of several parastatal companies were carried out, and inefficient officials dismissed. The ZCTU has criticized government policy, particularly wage restraints. In February 1984 the university was closed following student unrest.

In his efforts to solve the security problems of southern Africa, Kaunda met the South African Prime Minister, Pieter Botha, in April 1982. Although this meeting was criticized by some of the other 'front-line' states, the President has continued to take a major role in peace initiatives in the region, particularly in relation to the conflict in Namibia. Kaunda has also undertaken extensive overseas travel, seeking foreign investment and economic aid.

Government

A one-party state was proclaimed in December 1972 and inaugurated by a new Constitution in August 1973. Legislative power is held by the unicameral National Assembly, with 135 members: 10 nominated by the President and 125 elected for five years by universal adult suffrage, with up to three candidates per constituency. There is also an advisory House of Chiefs (27 members) to represent traditional tribal authorities. Executive power is held by the President, elected by popular vote at the same time as the Assembly. He appoints a Cabinet, led by the Prime Minister, to conduct the administration. The sole authorized party is the UNIP, led by the President. The highest policy-making body is the UNIP's Central Committee (25 members), to which the Cabinet is subordinate. Zambia comprises nine provinces, each administered by a Cabinet Minister.

Defence

The total strength of armed forces in July 1984 was 14,300 with 12,500 in the army and 1,800 in the air force. Paramilitary forces numbered 1,200. Military service is voluntary. There is also a National Defence Force responsible to the UNIP.

Economic Affairs

The basis of the Zambian economy is the mining of copper and cobalt, which provide 95% of Zambia's foreign exchange. In 1971 the Government acquired a 51% share in the mines, reorganized the structure of the industry and in 1973 took full control of the two largest copper mining groups, which merged in 1982 to form Zambia Consolidated Copper Mines (ZCCM), the second largest copper concern in the world. Production of copper fell from about 600,000 metric tons in 1982 to 574,800 tons in 1983, and again to about 550,000 tons in 1984. Price fluctuations in the world market, transport problems, shortages of equipment and spare parts, and labour unrest all combine to make the reliance on copper an unstable basis for the Zambian economy. Moreover, economically recoverable reserves of copper are expected to be nearing exhaustion by the end of the century.

Cobalt, found in Zambian copper-bearing ores, is increasing in importance. In 1983 a new cobalt refinery was opened at Nkana, and a contract to supply the USA with 1,800 metric tons of cobalt for its strategic mineral stockpile was signed in September. Production has risen from 1,560 metric tons in 1978 to over 3,000 tons in 1983, and was expected to total 4,500 tons in 1984. Zinc, lead, manganese, coal, gold and selenium are also mined, and a mineral exploration programme has been launched to prospect for chromium, nickel, iron, tin, tantalite, uranium, petroleum and gemstones. Illegal emerald mining was on the increase in 1983, and a Reserve Minerals Corporation (RMC) was set up by the Government to oversee the mining of all precious stones. Large phosphate deposits were found in eastern Zambia in early 1982.

Although about two-thirds of the labour force is engaged in agriculture, the inadequate expansion of food production, which derives mainly from a few large-scale commercial farmers, has necessitated increasing imports of basic foodstuffs, which have been a persistently adverse factor in Zambia's balance of payments position. In May 1980 the Government launched a massive investment programme aimed at making the country self-sufficient in food by 1990. The chief cash products are maize, cattle, groundnuts and tobacco. Droughts adversely affected harvests in 1979, 1980 and 1982. In 1983 and again in 1984 the drought worsened, and food aid was received from Western donor countries. In early 1985, however, the end of the drought was in sight and a substantial maize harvest was forecast for June. Agriculture forms the pivot of government plans to diversify the economy away from the declining copper industry, and in the 1985 budget K59.6m., or 22% of capital expenditure, was earmarked for rural development.

Zambia struggled to comply with UN sanctions against Rhodesia, although this necessitated great expenditure on alternative transport and communication routes. The dislocation of trade precipitated the worst crisis in the Zambian economy since independence, with GDP declining by 4% in 1977 and stagnating the following year, followed by further declines of 10%, 3%, and 2% in 1979, 1980 and 1981 respectively. Zambia was forced to reopen the rail border with Rhodesia in October 1978. The currency was devalued by 20% in July 1976 and by a further 10% in March 1978. Stringent budgets were introduced in 1979 and 1980, and in January 1981 exchange controls were further tightened and the Government announced that it was taking 'immediate steps' to reduce shortages of consumer goods, create employment and stabilize development. A three-year credit of SDR 800m. was agreed with the IMF in April 1981, to compensate Zambia for low copper and cobalt prices and rising fuel costs, but the IMF refused to release further tranches, after only SDR 300m. had been drawn, because of the continuing deterioration of the Zambian economy. No agreement was reached during negotiations in 1982; it was believed that the Zambian Government was reluctant to impose the IMF's stringent economic policy conditions, particularly before the 1983 elections, although the kwacha was devalued by 20% against the SDR in January 1983, when it was announced that repayments of principal on medium- and long-term debts would be suspended. Debt rescheduling talks were held in May, when it was decided to include a grace period of five years. A stand-by arrangement, extending to 1986, for SDR 225m. was eventually arranged in July 1984 with the IMF, and measures were taken to conserve Zambia's scarce foreign exchange.

The 1984 budget emphasized the need to boost foreign exchange earnings. Although a broader-based economy was planned, with both industrial and agricultural diversification, it was conceded that the mining industry would remain the dominant feature of the economy. Stringent austerity measures were imposed, and these were followed in the 1985 budget by further increases in indirect taxation. Gross domestic product, which declined by 1.3% in 1984, was expected to remain, at best, static in 1985, when Zambia would be looking to non-commercial foreign borrowing to cover about 58% of the projected K222m. budget deficit. In common with other developing countries, Zambia's problems in servicing its external debt have been intensified by the strength of the US dollar. Donor aid, particularly from Finland, Norway, Sweden, Belgium and Ireland, remains vital to the country's development programme, as does help from the World Bank and the IMF. In March 1985, however, it was reported that the stand-by borrowing programme, on which Zambia had drawn SDR 80m., had been suspended by the IMF, pending agreement with the Government on urgent measures to restructure the economy.

Transport and Communications

Zambia Railways connect Lusaka and the Copperbelt towns, Ndola and Kitwe, to the Zaire rail system. Following Rhodesia's unilateral declaration of independence in 1965, Zambia sought to develop a transport and communication network outside the control of the white-ruled south, diversifying its trade routes through Malawi, Mozambique and Tanzania. The existing Great North Road to Dar es Salaam has been supplemented by two pipelines from Ndola to Dar es Salaam, and the Tanzania–Zambia railway (Tazara), built with Chinese aid, was opened in October 1975. Air, road and rail links to the south were fully restored following the arrival of a British Governor in Rhodesia in December 1979. There is an international airport at Lusaka and work is in progress to extend other airports. Zambia Airways provides domestic and intercontinental links.

Social Welfare

The Department of Labour and Social Services is responsible for relief of distress, care of the aged, protection of children, adoption and probation services. It gives grants for group welfare services including voluntary schemes. A form of pension is granted to the indigent aged. In 1979 Zambia had 782 hospitals (including rural health centres), with 26,599 beds. In 1979 there were 714 physicians in government service.

Education

Between 1964 and 1979 enrolment in schools increased by more than 260%, and by 1981 there were 1,068,314 pupils at primary schools and 98,862 at state secondary schools. However, plans to introduce compulsory education had largely failed by 1984, with up to one-third of children in rural areas denied schooling because of overcrowding and the lack of facilities and financial support. The 1981 budget allocation for education was K83m. and by 1984 this had been increased to K125.6m. in an attempt to rectify the situation. The University of Zambia has capacity for 5,000 students, and in 1983/84 had 3,142 students. There are 14 teacher training colleges. Zambianization of the teaching force is one of the main objectives of government education policy. Adult literacy was estimated at 35% in 1979.

Tourism

The numerous lakes, Victoria Falls, Kafue and Luangwa Valley game reserves, as well as the climate, attract a sizeable tourist traffic, which the Government hopes to expand as part of its economic diversification programme. Game-watching, camping, fishing and water-sports are available, while there are a number of excellent hotels and motels. In 1983 almost 200,000 tourists visited Zambia, producing earnings estimated at K60m.

Public Holidays

1985: 1 May (Labour Day), 24 May (African Freedom Day, anniversary of OAU's foundation), 5 July (Heroes' Day), 8 July (Unity Day), 5 August (Farmers' Day), 24 October (Independence Day), 25 December (Christmas Day).

1986: 1 January (New Year's Day), 11 March (Youth Day), 28–31 March (Easter).

Directory

The Constitution

A new Constitution was introduced on 25 August 1973. Its main provisions are summarized below:

THE PRESIDENT

The President of the Republic of Zambia is Head of State and Commander-in-Chief of the Armed Forces. Presidential powers include the appointment of a Prime Minister, a Secretary-General of the Party, an Attorney-General, a Director of Public Prosecutions, a Chief Justice and judges of the Supreme Court. Presidential nominations are not valid unless they are supported by at least 200 registered voters from each of Zambia's nine provinces. The President is head of the United National Independence Party (UNIP). Election is by popular vote at the same time as the National Assembly. The President is elected for a five-year term, but may stand for re-election if he or she so chooses.

In October 1978 a conference of UNIP members approved the following constitutional changes: all Presidential candidates must have been members of UNIP for five years prior to nomination, must not have a prison record and must be 'disciplined'.

THE PRIME MINISTER

The Prime Minister is the Leader of Government Business and an ex-officio member of the UNIP Central Committee.

THE SECRETARY-GENERAL

The Secretary-General is an ex-officio member of the Cabinet, elected from among the members of the Central Committee, and is responsible for the administration of UNIP.

THE CENTRAL COMMITTEE

The new Constitution provides for a Central Committee for the only legal party, the United National Independence Party (UNIP). It consists of not more than 25 members, 20 to be elected at the Party's General Conference, held once every five years prior to the presidential and legislative elections, and three to be nominated by the President. The Central Committee has more powers than the Cabinet. It also includes eight sub-committees, whose members are appointed by the President from among the Central Committee and National Council members. All members must be full-time officials of UNIP's National Headquarters.

THE CABINET

The Cabinet is appointed by the President, who may nominate non-elected ministers and appoint others from elected members of the National Assembly, in consultation with the Prime Minister. The decision of the Cabinet is subordinate to that of the UNIP Central Committee.

LEGISLATURE

Parliament consists of the President and a National Assembly of 135 members, of whom 125 are elected in the legislative elections, while the remaining 10 are chosen by the President. There is a Speaker and a Deputy Speaker. The normal life of Parliament is five years. To become law, a bill requires Presidential assent.

THE HOUSE OF CHIEFS

The Constitution provides for a House of Chiefs numbering 27, four each from the Northern, Western, Southern and Eastern Provinces, three each from the North-Western, Luapula and Central Provinces and two from the Copperbelt Province. It may submit resolutions to be debated by the Assembly and consider those matters referred to it by the President.

JUDICIARY

The Supreme Court of Zambia is the final Court of Appeal. The Chief Justice and other judges are appointed by the President. Subsidiary to the Supreme Court is the High Court which has unlimited jurisdiction to hear and determine any civil or criminal proceedings under any Zambian law.

CITIZENSHIP

The qualifying period for Zambian citizenship is increased from five to 10 years. Every citizen of Zambia who is over the age of 18 years, and a registered voter, is eligible to vote.

BILL OF RIGHTS

The Constitution provides for a Bill of Rights in which the fundamental freedoms and rights of the individual are guaranteed. The President has the power to proclaim a state of emergency at any time when, in the President's opinion, the security of the State is threatened.

Legislature

NATIONAL ASSEMBLY

Following the establishment in 1972 of a one-party state with UNIP as the sole party, all MPs must be members of UNIP. Initial elections under the one-party system were held in December 1973. Elections are held in two stages; in the first stage the candidates file their nomination papers to the elections office. These are then submitted to the UNIP Central Committee for adoption. Candidates who are thus adopted are free to contest the general election, and the electorate as a whole may choose between the candidates selected. There are 125 elected members, 10 members nominated by the President, and the Speaker.

Speaker: Dr Robinson Nabulyato.

House of Chiefs

The House of Chiefs is an advisory body which may submit resolutions to be debated by the National Assembly. There are 27 Chiefs, four each from the Northern, Western, Southern and Eastern Provinces, three each from the North Western, Luapula and Central Provinces, and two from the Copperbelt Province.

Transport

RAILWAYS

Total length of railways in Zambia was 2,187 km (1,360 miles) in 1984. There are two major railway lines: the Zambia Railways network, which traverses the country from the Copperbelt in northern Zambia and links with the National Railways of Zimbabwe to provide access to South African ports, and the Tanzania-Zambia Railway (Tazara) system, linking New Kapiri-Mposhi in Zambia with Dar es Salaam in Tanzania.

ROADS

There was a total road network of 37,232 km in 1982 of which 5,583 km were asphalted. The main arterial roads run from Beit Bridge (Zimbabwe) to Tunduma (the Great North Road), through the copper mining area to Chingola and Chililabombwe (the Zaire Border Road), from Livingstone to the junction of the Kafue river and the Great North Road, and from Lusaka to the Malawi border (the Great East Road). In February 1984 the 300-km BotZam highway linking Kazungula with Nata, in Botswana, was formally opened.

ZIMBABWE

Introductory Survey

Location, Climate, Language, Religion, Flag, Capital

The Republic of Zimbabwe is a land-locked state in southern Africa, with Mozambique to the east, Zambia to the north-west, Botswana to the south-west and South Africa to the south. The climate is tropical, modified considerably by altitude. Average monthly temperatures range from 13°C (55°F) to 22°C (72°F) on the highveld, and from 20°C (68°F) to 30°C (86°F) in the low-lying valley of the Zambezi river. The rainy season is from November to March. The official language is English, while the principal African languages are Chishona and Sindebele. Most of the Africans follow traditional beliefs, while the Asian minority are generally Muslims or Hindus. About 20% of the population are Christians. The flag has seven equal horizontal stripes, of green, gold, red, black, red, gold and green, with a white triangle, bearing a red five-pointed star on which a gold 'Zimbabwe bird' is superimposed, at the hoist. The capital is Harare (formerly known as Salisbury).

Recent History

In 1923 responsibility for Southern Rhodesia (now Zimbabwe) was transferred from the British South Africa Company to the United Kingdom Government, and the territory became a British colony. It had full self-government (except for African interests and some other matters) under an administration controlled by European settlers. African voting rights were restricted.

In 1953 the colony was merged with two British protectorates, Northern Rhodesia (now Zambia) and Nyasaland (now Malawi), to form the Federation of Rhodesia and Nyasaland, also known as the Central African Federation. Sir Godfrey Huggins (later the 1st Viscount Malvern), the Prime Minister of Southern Rhodesia from 1933 to 1953, became the first Prime Minister of the Federation, being succeeded by Sir Roy Welensky in 1956. In Southern Rhodesia itself, Garfield Todd was Prime Minister from 1953 until opposition to his liberal policies forced his resignation in 1958, when Sir Edgar Whitehead came to power. Meanwhile, white immigration, mainly from Britain and South Africa, had led to an increase in the European population from about 80,000 in 1945 to more than 200,000 in 1958.

A new constitution, ending most of the United Kingdom's legal controls (except for foreign affairs), came into effect in November 1962. This constitution provided for a limited African franchise. At elections in December 1962 Sir Edgar Whitehead lost power to the Rhodesian Front (RF), a coalition of white opposition groups committed to maintaining racial segregation. The Front's leader, Winston Field, became Prime Minister. As a result of successful African nationalist movements in the other member countries, the Federation was dissolved in December 1963.

Meanwhile, African nationalists campaigned for an end to discrimination and for rapid progress to full democracy in Southern Rhodesia. The African National Congress, founded in 1934, was revived in 1957, with Joshua Nkomo as President. The Congress was banned in February 1959 but some of its members formed the National Democratic Party (NDP) in January 1960. Nkomo, although in exile, was elected President of the NDP in October 1960. When the NDP was banned in December 1961, Nkomo formed the Zimbabwe African People's Union (ZAPU). This was declared an unlawful organization in September 1962. ZAPU split in July 1963 and a breakaway group, led by the Rev. Ndabaningi Sithole, formed the Zimbabwe African National Union (ZANU) in August. Robert Mugabe became Secretary-General of ZANU.

In April 1964 Field resigned, accused of moving too slowly towards independence. He was replaced by his deputy, Ian Smith, who rejected British conditions for independence, including acceptance by the whole Rhodesian population and unimpeded progress to majority rule. ZANU was banned in August 1964. After Northern Rhodesia became independent as Zambia in October 1964, Southern Rhodesia became generally (although not officially) known as Rhodesia. At elections in May 1965 the RF won all 50 European seats in the legislature. After more unsuccessful negotiations with the British Government, a state of emergency (to be renewed annually) was declared on 5 November. Smith made a unilateral declaration of independence (UDI) on 11 November 1965. The British-appointed Governor announced the Cabinet's dismissal, but no effective steps were taken to remove it from power. The Smith regime abrogated the 1961 constitution and proclaimed a new one, naming the country Rhodesia. The British Government regarded Rhodesia's independence as unconstitutional and illegal, and no other country formally recognized it.

The United Kingdom terminated all trading and other relations with Rhodesia, while the UN applied economic sanctions against the regime; it was subsequently revealed that many international companies circumvented the restrictions. Following a referendum in June 1969, Rhodesia was declared a republic in March 1970. The 1969 constitution provided for a bicameral Legislative Assembly, comprising a 23-member Senate and a 66-member House of Assembly (50 Europeans and 16 Africans). The President had only formal powers and Smith remained Prime Minister. The RF won all 50 European seats in the House of Assembly in 1970, 1974 and 1977.

Both ZAPU and ZANU took up arms against the illegal Smith regime, and African guerrilla groups were involved in clashes with Rhodesian security forces. Armed South African police were called in to assist the regime in 1967. The British Prime Minister, Harold Wilson, twice held negotiations with Ian Smith, in December 1966 and October 1968, but, despite British concessions, the talks proved abortive.

In November 1971 the British and Rhodesian Governments agreed on draft proposals for a constitutional settlement, subject to their acceptability to the Rhodesian people 'as a whole'. In December the African National Council (ANC), led by Bishop Abel Muzorewa, was formed to co-ordinate opposition to the plan. The British commission which visited Rhodesia in 1972 reported that the proposals were unacceptable to the majority of Africans. The introduction of more discriminatory legislation was accompanied by increased activity by African nationalist guerrilla groups.

In December 1974, however, a summit was held in Lusaka between three African Presidents and leaders of four nationalist organizations (including ZAPU, ZANU and the ANC), resulting in agreement for a border cease-fire, conditional on the release of African political detainees and on the convening of a constitutional conference in 1975. The African organizations agreed to unite within the ANC, with Bishop Muzorewa as President, and in August 1975 held abortive constitutional talks with the Rhodesian Government. In September the ANC split into rival factions, led by Bishop Muzorewa and Joshua Nkomo. Constitutional talks between the Government and the Nkomo faction began in December 1975 but broke down in March 1976. In April the US Secretary of State, Dr Henry Kissinger, entered into lengthy negotiations with the British Government, the Presidents of Botswana, Mozambique, Tanzania and Zambia, the South African Prime Minister and Ian Smith. In September, under pressure from South Africa, Smith announced his Government's acceptance of proposals leading to majority rule within two years.

The British Government convened the Geneva Conference, which opened in October, to implement the transition to majority rule. It was attended by delegations representing the RF, the African nationalists and the British Government. The nationalist delegations were led by Bishop Muzorewa, the Rev. Sithole, Joshua Nkomo and Robert Mugabe (leader of ZANU's external wing, based in Mozambique). Nkomo and Mugabe, who claimed the support of the guerrillas, adopted a joint position as the Patriotic Front. Although an independence date not later than 31 March 1978 was provisionally agreed, the Conference was adjourned in December after failing to agree on the composition of the proposed interim government.

In January 1977 negotiations resumed, and Angola, Botswana, Mozambique, Tanzania and Zambia (the 'front-line' states) declared their support for the Patriotic Front. Ian Smith rejected British proposals for an interim administration and received a mandate from the RF to repeal racially discriminatory laws and to seek agreement with such African factions as he chose. Supported by the OAU, the Patriotic Front demanded in July 1977 that power be handed direct to them by the Rhodesian Government. A general election was held in August, with the RF retaining all 50 European seats. The nationalist organizations refused to contest the eight directly-elected African seats.

In November 1977 Ian Smith accepted the principle of universal adult suffrage, and talks on an internal settlement were initiated with Bishop Muzorewa's United African National Council (UANC), the Sithole faction of the ANC and the Zimbabwe United People's Organization (ZUPO), led by Chief Jeremiah Chirau. These talks led to the signing of an internal settlement on 3 March 1978, providing for an interim power-sharing administration to prepare for independence on 31 December 1978. The proposals were rejected by the Patriotic Front and by the UN Security Council. In May 1978 the newly-created Executive Council, consisting of Smith, Sithole, Bishop Muzorewa and Chirau, ordered the release of all political detainees in an attempt to bring about a cease-fire. Frequent clashes between Rhodesian security forces and Patriotic Front guerrillas, including Rhodesian attacks on ZAPU and ZANU bases in Zambia and Mozambique, resulted in the introduction of selective martial law in September.

In January 1979 a 'majority rule' constitution, containing entrenched safeguards for the white minority, was approved by the House of Assembly and endorsed by a referendum of European voters. The United Kingdom and the USA continued to call on all parties to accept UN-supervised elections as the basis for a viable settlement. In April 1979 elections to the new House of Assembly (the country's first by universal adult suffrage) were held in two stages: first for 20 directly-elected European members (chosen by non-African voters only) and then for 72 African members (chosen by the whole electorate). The UANC emerged as the majority party, with 51 seats in the new House, while the RF won all 20 white seats. In May the new Parliament elected Josiah Gumede to be President. Bishop Muzorewa became Prime Minister of the country (renamed Zimbabwe Rhodesia) in June. In accordance with the constitution, Muzorewa formed a government of 'national unity', a coalition of parties in the new House, including European members (Ian Smith became Minister without Portfolio). International recognition was not forthcoming, and UN sanctions remained in force.

New impetus for a lasting and internationally-recognized settlement came following the Commonwealth Conference in Zambia in August 1979. In September a Rhodesian Constitutional Conference was convened at Lancaster House, in London, under the chairmanship of Lord Carrington, Britain's Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, and attended by delegations under Bishop Muzorewa and the joint leaders of the Patriotic Front. The Patriotic Front reluctantly agreed to special representation for the whites under the proposed new constitution, which was eventually accepted by both parties. During the talks the guerrilla war escalated and Rhodesian forces hit economic targets in Zambia in October. However, complete agreement was reached on transitional arrangements in November and the details of a cease-fire were finalized in the following month. On 11 December the Zimbabwe Rhodesia Parliament voted to renounce independence and to revert to the status of a British colony, as Southern Rhodesia. Illegal rule ended on the following day, when Parliament was dissolved, the President, Prime Minister and Cabinet resigned, and the British-appointed Governor, Lord Soames, arrived in Salisbury, vested with full executive and legislative authority during the transition to legal independence. The United Kingdom immediately lifted economic sanctions.

Lord Soames paved the way for fresh elections to a new House of Assembly by lifting the ban on the two wings of the Patriotic Front and by ordering the release of most of the detainees who were held under the 'emergency powers' laws. Under the terms of the cease-fire, Patriotic Front troops assembled in 16 areas under the control of a small Commonwealth Monitoring Force. By 7 January 1980 nearly 20,000 men had arrived in the assembly areas. The election campaign was marred by factional violence and intimidation, and the cease-fire was briefly threatened by the anger of the Patriotic Front and the 'front-line' states over the presence of South African troops in Rhodesia. However, elections were held in February (again in two stages) under the supervision of a British Electoral Commissioner. Robert Mugabe's ZANU–PF emerged as the largest single party, winning 57 of the 80 African seats. Joshua Nkomo's Patriotic Front won 20 seats and the UANC only three. In a separate poll of white voters, Ian Smith's RF won all 20 reserved seats. The new state of Zimbabwe became legally independent, within the Commonwealth, on 18 April, with Rev. Canaan Banana as President and Robert Mugabe as Prime Minister, at the head of a coalition Government including ZANU–PF and Patriotic Front members.

Despite the Government's attempts to balance gradual Africanization of Zimbabwean society with acceptance of existing white economic power and technical skills, record numbers of people, mainly whites, emigrated in 1980 and 1981, and emigration levels have since remained high, with over 19,000 people emigrating in 1983 alone. It was estimated that the white population declined from about 200,000 at independence to slightly more than 100,000 in 1984. Zimbabwe severed diplomatic relations with South Africa in September 1980, but maintains the economic links on which both countries are dependent.

Following the war of independence, in which 27,000 people had been killed, factional differences between former guerrillas, prompted by tribal rivalries of the Shona and Ndebele, continued. Relations between Robert Mugabe and Joshua Nkomo have remained uneasy, particularly concerning the former's intention of eventually introducing a one-party state. Nkomo was 'demoted' in a Cabinet reshuffle in January 1981, and in February 1982 large illegal arms caches, discovered on Patriotic Front-owned land, were interpreted as part of a plot to overthrow Mugabe. The Cabinet was almost immediately reshuffled, with Nkomo and two Patriotic Front colleagues losing their posts.

In March nine MPs of the Republican Front (the Rhodesian Front having changed its name in June 1981) resigned from the party over its unwillingness to co-operate with the Government, and sat as Independents. In 1983 there were signs that the RF was losing some support among white Zimbabweans, when it lost two seats to Independent candidates at parliamentary by-elections held in April and September. The party continued to lose ground during 1984, and the Independents gained another seat at a by-election in February, which the RF declined to contest. In May another RF MP resigned from the party to sit as an Independent. As a result, the RF then held only seven of the 20 seats reserved for whites, the remaining 13 being held by Independents. The RF was renamed the Conservative Alliance of Zimbabwe (CAZ) at the Party Congress in July, when it was also announced that membership of the party would be open to all races. In December it was reported that a CAZ MP was to give up his seat.

Many of the unpopular practices of the Smith regime, including 'emergency powers' and the detention of political opponents, have continued since independence, and the state of emergency has remained in force. Both Smith and Nkomo have been detained briefly, and several of their respective supporters actually arrested and prosecuted. There was serious unrest in Matabeleland in early 1983, caused both by pro-Nkomo dissidents, mainly deserters from the Zimbabwe National Army, and by the North Korean-trained Fifth Brigade, sent to quell the disturbances. Several hundred people, including many civilians, were believed to have been killed. A committee of inquiry, appointed by the Government to investigate allegations of army brutality, began hearing evidence in January 1984. In March 1983 Nkomo, fearing for his safety, fled the country, first to Botswana and later to the United Kingdom. A government proposal to have Nkomo's parliamentary seat declared vacant was withdrawn, following his return to Zimbabwe in August. There were moves by some members of ZAPU to negotiate a merger with ZANU in 1983, but no agreement was reached.

During 1983 the Government took measures to prevent subversive activity. In addition to the deployment of the Fifth Brigade in Matabeleland, new laws were introduced in September, providing for further press censorship and granting the security forces greater powers under the state of emergency, which was renewed in January 1984. In November 1983 Bishop Muzorewa was arrested on suspicion of having subversive links with South Africa. He remained in detention, without trial, until his release in September 1984. In February 1984, in a renewed anti-insurgency campaign, an estimated 10,000 troops were again sent into Matabeleland, which was once more placed under curfew. These security measures, combined with the drought, reportedly caused severe food shortages in the region, and there were unsubstantiated reports of renewed atrocities committed by troops in the area during March and April 1984. The curfew remained in force until August, when it was lifted after an improvement in the security situation. However, it was thought that up to 2,000 civilians had died during the two army campaigns of 1983 and 1984. Troops remained active in the region by early 1985, when it was estimated that only about 500 dissidents were still operating there.

In January 1984 Mugabe announced a Cabinet reshuffle, aimed at reducing government costs. In February Provincial Governors, with ministerial status, were appointed in each of Zimbabwe's eight provinces. In the same month, Mugabe announced that, if re-elected in general elections, due to be held in 1985, his Government would seek unanimous approval for the creation of a one-party state. This aim was reiterated at a ZANU Party Congress, held in August 1984 and attended by some 6,000 delegates. The Congress unanimously approved a new party constitution, committing the party to the establishment of a Marxist-Leninist one-party state, although it also passed a separate resolution stating that one-party rule should be introduced 'in the fullness of time and in accordance with the law and the constitution', suggesting that ZANU intended to proceed cautiously towards this aim, which is opposed by ZAPU and CAZ. Under the new party constitution, membership of the ZANU Central Committee was expanded from 33 to 90, and supreme power was vested in a 15-member political bureau, which was to superintend and administer all government ministries. The members of the political bureau were appointed by Mugabe and the party Vice-President, who had respectively been unanimously elected First and Second Secretaries of the new body. Other important resolutions passed by the Congress called for the immediate creation of an executive presidency (combining the functions of the head of state and the head of government), for all civil servants to be members of ZANU, and for increased efforts to 'socialize' the economy. A new leadership code, designed to reduce corruption among party leaders, was also approved. The Congress effectively confirmed ZANU's control of present government policy, and further secured Mugabe's power as both party leader and Prime Minister.

However, during 1984 and early 1985 there was continued unrest, principally caused by clashes between supporters of the various political factions. The state of emergency was renewed in July 1984 and January 1985. The murder by dissidents of a number of ZANU officials in the first half of 1984 led to violent demonstrations by thousands of ZANU supporters in the Midlands province in June, in which at least seven people were killed and some 300 were injured. The Government banned all ZAPU meetings in the Midlands and Mashonaland West provinces because of ZAPU's alleged support for the dissidents. The ban was lifted in October, and in the same month ZAPU held a Party Congress, at which Nkomo was re-elected party President, and called for the formation of a united front to oppose ZANU in the forthcoming elections. During 1984 ZAPU's political strength was undermined by a number of events, including the defection to ZANU of one of the three ZAPU members of the Cabinet in April, and the death of the ZAPU Vice-President, Josiah Chinamano, in October. In November Mugabe dismissed the two remaining ZAPU Ministers in the Cabinet, including Cephas Msipa, then party Secretary-General, from their Cabinet posts, following the murder of a senior ZANU party official by dissidents whom ZANU alleged to be supported by ZAPU. Msipa later resigned from ZAPU, and the murder heightened the tension between the two parties and caused further rioting, in which several people died.

In January 1985 Nkomo was forced to suspend temporarily his election campaign, after thousands of ZANU supporters demonstrated against him and clashed with ZAPU supporters during his pre-election tour of the country. There were further outbreaks of violence in February, leading to a number of deaths, and early in March up to 10,000 government troops sealed off the suburbs of Bulawayo, in Matabeleland, for two days, and made house-to-house searches in which over 1,000 arrests were made. The Government claimed that the operation was necessary to quell factional violence, but Nkomo asserted that it was intended to demoralize ZAPU supporters prior to the elections. Following the operation, there were reports that more than 50 ZAPU supporters had been abducted from Matabeleland in what ZAPU alleged to be part of a ZANU campaign to suppress political opposition. The Government declined to comment on the reported abductions.

The Government had planned to hold general elections in March 1985, and in February the House of Assembly was dissolved preparatory to the elections. However, owing to delays in the electoral preparations, it was subsequently announced that the elections would be postponed. No specific date was set for the elections, but it was thought that they would be held in June.

Government

Under the terms of the 1980 Constitution (agreed upon by all parties at the Lancaster House talks), legislative power is vested in the bicameral Parliament, consisting of a House of Assembly and a Senate. The House has 100 members directly elected by universal adult suffrage from 80 'common roll' constituencies and 20 separate 'white roll' constituencies. The Senate (with delaying powers only) has 40 members: 14 elected by the 'common roll' members, 10 by the 'white roll' members, 10 by the traditional House of Chiefs and six presidential nominees. Members of both Houses serve for five years (subject to dissolution). Executive authority is vested in the President, elected by Parliament for six years. In almost all matters the President acts on the advice of the Cabinet, led by the Prime Minister and, on the latter's recommendation, other Ministers. The Cabinet must have the confidence of Parliament, to which it is responsible.

Defence

Total armed forces numbered about 41,300 in July 1984: 40,000 in the army and 1,300 in the air force. The Zimbabwe National Army was formed by the integration of about 50,000 former guerrillas, from both Zanla (loyal to Robert Mugabe in the war of independence) and Zipra (loyal to Joshua Nkomo), with the existing security forces. On completion, in November 1981, the National Army numbered 60,000 but has gradually been reduced to its present size. In 1983/84 the defence budget was Z.$418m. Zimbabwe receives military aid and training from the United Kingdom and the Democratic People's Republic of Korea. Plans to give military training to all adults, for the formation of a people's militia, were announced in 1982, and in September 1983 it was announced that the training programme was under way. About 20,000 people had already been trained as militia by mid-1984, and training units had been established in seven provinces. There is a police force of 10,000.

Economic Affairs

Agriculture is an important source of raw materials for industry, and usually constitutes about 18% of GDP. About 58% of the labour force were engaged in agriculture in 1982. The principal cash crops are tobacco, maize, cotton, sugar, wheat, soybeans and coffee. Agricultural output was adversely affected by three successive years of drought in 1981–84, and declined by about 20% in 1983. However, there was a marked improvement in this sector in 1984, when the value of agricultural output rose by about 30% to an estimated Z.$940m. Export earnings from the agricultural sector for that year were expected to reach Z.$612m., and agricultural production was expected to improve further in 1985. Tobacco is Zimbabwe's principal export, accounting for around 20% of foreign exchange earnings, and over 96% of the tobacco crop is exported. Open trading on world tobacco markets was resumed in early 1980 after its interruption by UN sanctions. Following disappointing prices for a low-quality crop of 122,000 metric tons in 1980, production limits were introduced to improve the quality of the crop. A high-quality crop of 67,300 tons was recorded in 1981. The 1982 crop rose to 89,400 tons, and in 1983 94,300 tons, worth Z.$178m., were produced. Production rose to about 120,000 tons, worth some Z.$247m., in 1984, and in that year tobacco accounted for about 23% of total foreign exchange earnings. The 1985 crop was expected to be about 119,000 tons. Under normal conditions, Zimbabwe has the potential to become the major supplier of maize to southern African countries. A record maize crop of 2.8m. metric tons was produced in 1981, but serious drought reduced this figure to 2m. tons in 1982 and to an estimated 600,000 tons in 1983, and it was initially thought that the 1984 crop would be only about 560,000 tons, necessitating imports of between 500,000–700,000 tons. However, increased production by peasant farmers resulted in a considerable recovery in the maize crop by the end of the year, with total production put at about 930,000 tons, reducing the import requirement to some 260,000 tons. Improved rainfall in the early part of 1985 was expected to result in a record crop of some 3m. tons for that year, enough to cover domestic requirements and to provide a projected surplus of around 1m. tons for export. The cotton crop reached a record 249,000 metric tons in 1984, and exports of cotton were expected to earn over Z.$100m. in foreign exchange in that year. The stock-raising sector has been badly affected by prolonged drought and disease. In 1983 alone, more than 500,000 head of cattle were estimated to have been lost, resulting in a serious shortfall in beef exports. However, measures were taken to reduce cattle losses during 1984, and in that year the livestock industry was expected to earn some Z.$100m. Under the Lomé Convention, Zimbabwe's beef export quota to the EEC is 8,100 tons, valued at about Z.$50m., and it is hoped that exports to the EEC will start in 1985. In 1980 the Government instigated a programme to resettle African peasant families on vacant and underexploited farms, but it was estimated that only about 40,000 families would have been resettled by mid-1985.

An estimated 6% of the working population are employed in mining, which in 1981 contributed 5% of GDP. Gold, asbestos and nickel are the major mineral exports. In 1982 gold exports were worth an estimated Z.$135m. Other minerals include copper, silver, emeralds, cobalt, chromium ore and coal. Despite sanctions, in force until the end of 1979, the value of production rose every year between 1969 and 1980. However, in 1981 and 1982 income from mining fell by 5% and 2.7% respectively, owing to the recession in world metal markets, which resulted in the closure of many mines. There was some recovery in 1983, when, although mining output declined by some 3%, the value of mineral production rose by nearly 23%, to Z.$470.5m., of which about 41% was provided by gold production of 453,000 troy oz, worth about Z.$194m. The improvement in the mining sector was expected to continue in 1984, when the value of mineral production was forecast to reach Z.$550m. In 1982 the Government formed the Zimbabwe Minerals Marketing Corporation to control the mining industry, with the exception of gold. A new parastatal mining organization, the Zimbabwe Mining Development Corporation (ZMDC), was established in 1984 for the exploration and exploitation of minerals, and in that year the Reserve Bank introduced a guaranteed minimum purchase price for gold, designed to minimize the effects on gold earnings of fluctuations in the world gold price.

In 1982 manufacturing employed about 16% of the labour force and contributed 26% of GDP. The sector has been adversely affected by controls on imports, owing to Zimbabwe's lack of foreign exchange, and manufacturing output fell by 2%–3% in 1983, with a further decline of about 6% forecast in 1984. The most important sectors, measured by the gross value of output, are food processing, metals, chemicals and textiles. The dam on Lake Kariba provides much of the country's electricity, and the first phase of a new thermal power station at Hwange was in operation by early 1985. Zimbabwe is expected to become self-sufficient in electric power when the second phase of the project becomes operational in mid-1986. Hwange has a total operating capacity of 920 MW. A major new hydroelectric scheme is to be undertaken at Batoka Gorge on the Zambezi river. Zimbabwe faced severe fuel shortages during 1982, owing mainly to the persistent sabotage of the railway and pipeline between Mutare and the Mozambican port of Beira. In 1983 the Government announced plans to take over key sectors of industry. A national oil company, with responsibility for fuel procurement, was to be established. Coal accounts for about one-half of total local energy sources, and there are some 26 coalfields, with total reserves of about 29,000m. tons.

Legal independence provided an initial stimulus to all aspects of the economy. The UN Security Council lifted trade sanctions at the end of 1979, and this, combined with the easing of transport and trade restrictions caused by the war, enabled Zimbabwe to participate fully in international trade. South Africa remains Zimbabwe's principal trading partner. In 1982 total exports (excluding gold and re-exports) fell by 9% from 1981, and imports rose by 6%, creating serious balance-of-payments difficulties for Zimbabwe. The current account deficit reached some Z.$553m. in 1982. This improved, to about Z.$450m., in 1983, partly as a result of the lack of foreign exchange available for the import of non-food commodities. The current account deficit was expected to be further reduced in 1984, when the overall balance-of-payments account was forecast to show a small surplus, partly as a result of a projected 25% increase in the value of exports for that year. The GNP grew by 15.4% in 1980 and by 13.0% in 1981. However, the growth rate was less than 3% in 1982, and negative in 1983, as the world recession affected Zimbabwe. The situation was aggravated by the poor trading position of the Zimbabwe dollar, transport difficulties and the departure of Europeans whose skills cannot yet be filled by suitably qualified Africans, although as many as 40% of the adult labour force may be unemployed. Gross domestic product (GDP) declined by some 4.5% in 1982, by about 4% in 1983, and was expected to decline by a further 1%–2% in 1984. However, a growth rate in real terms of between 2% and 3% was expected for 1985. By 1983 the annual rate of inflation was approaching 20%, compared with 14% during 1981–82, and the inflation rate was about 17% in 1984.

Plans to expand the economy of Zimbabwe depend largely on the procuring of sufficient finance, particularly from foreign governments. The Zimbabwe Conference on Reconstruction and Development (ZIMCORD) was held in March 1981, but the flow of development funds into Zimbabwe has been disappointing. A long-awaited three-year national development plan, announced in November 1982, envisaged total expenditure of Z.$6,000m. and a rather optimistic average annual growth rate of 8%. Zimbabwe has had persistent problems in restraining its budget deficit in recent years, and the 1983/84 deficit was Z.$630m., partly owing to increased expenditure because of the drought, which led to the introduction of supplementary budgetary expenditure appropriations in February 1984. In March 1983 the Government reached agreement with the IMF for a stand-by credit of SDR 300m., plus a further SDR 56.1m. under the IMF compensatory financing facility. Zimbabwe had already submitted to a 16.5% devaluation of its currency, in December 1982, and to import curbs to meet the necessary terms. However, following the supplementary allocations to the budget in 1983/84, and the Government's failure to reduce the budgetary deficit for 1984/85, the IMF suspended the remainder of the stand-by facility in August 1984. Negotiations between the Government and the IMF for a further stand-by credit were held during late 1984 and early 1985, but no agreement had been reached by April of that year. The budgetary deficit for 1984/85 was projected at Z.$648m. in August 1984, but supplementary budgetary appropriations, made in January 1985, were expected to increase the deficit to Z.$691m. Zimbabwe's foreign debt has risen from Z.$400m. at independence to a projected Z.$3,000m. in 1984, and there is a chronic lack of foreign exchange. In an attempt to reduce the outflow of foreign currency resources, drastic measures were announced in March 1984.

Transport and Communications

In January 1980 road and air links with Zambia and Mozambique were restored, following 14 years of comparative isolation. The rail links with Beira and Maputo in Mozambique, important export outlets, also opened later in the year. In addition, Zimbabwe has rail links with South Africa, Botswana and Zambia. Some 445 km of track had been electrified by mid-1983, and there are plans to electrify the route from Harare to Maputo within the next decade. In August 1983 the World Bank agreed to a US $40m. loan to help National Railways of Zimbabwe (NRZ) to continue its operations, and NRZ planned to spend Z.$28m. on improvements to the railways in 1985/86. There were about 170,400 km of roads in 1982, of which about 40,400 km were main and secondary roads. Work on constructing and upgrading a 126-km road, connecting Nandi and Rusipi, began in 1984. A national transport and rural roads study was under way during 1985, and was expected to be completed by the end of that year. International and domestic air services connect most of the larger towns, and in 1984 Air Zimbabwe was planning to expand its route system to include a number of new destinations. In 1981 the Southern African Development Co-ordination Conference (SADCC) decided to spend US $111m. on developing Harare airport to reduce dependence on South African transport facilities in the region. A telecommunications satellite is to be built at Mazoe, north-west of Harare, with Japanese aid.

Social Welfare

The Government is committed to extending the benefits of social security to the whole population, to be financed through major changes in taxation. There is a free national health service for all persons earning less than Z.$150 per month. In 1981 there were about 672 hospitals and clinics, and 1,200 physicians. A programme to expand health facilities in rural areas was in progress, and in 1983 the EEC was to spend nearly Z.$5m. on construction of 47 clinics in remote areas. In 1985 Italy agreed to provide funding for the construction of a Z.$5m. hospital in Chinhoyi.

Education

Education in Zimbabwe is non-racial at all levels. Estimated expenditure on education in 1983/84 was about Z.$466m. All primary education is free, but not compulsory. Between 1979 and 1984 the numbers of primary school pupils increased from 819,128 to 2,147,898, and secondary school pupils from 73,540 to 422,584. In 1984 over 90% of children of primary school age were attending school. Legislation to make school attendance compulsory for all children under 16 years of age is being prepared. The increase in the number of pupils since 1979 has required the inception of a four-year teacher-training programme and the recruitment of teachers from other countries, and by 1984 some 1,333 expatriate and volunteer teachers had been recruited since 1981. The total number of teachers was 69,058 in 1984. The number of primary schools rose from 2,411 at independence to 4,161 in 1984, and the number of secondary schools increased from 177 to 1,139 over the same period. In addition, 54 rural secondary schools have been established. The University of Zimbabwe, at Harare, provides multi-racial higher education, and in 1983 enrolment of students totalled 3,620. Some 4,124 students were enrolled at the University in 1984, and enrolment was expected to rise to 7,000 by 1987.

Tourism

The principal tourist attractions are the Victoria Falls, the Kariba Dam and the Wankie Game Reserve and National Park. Zimbabwe Ruins, near Fort Victoria, and World's View, in the Matopos Hills, are of special interest. In the Eastern Districts, around Umtali, there is trout fishing and climbing. The number of tourists visiting the country rose from 227,195 in 1980 to 351,045 in 1982, when tourism produced income of Z.$32m. The industry has suffered recently from the effects of the drought, the world recession and the security problems in certain areas, and in 1983 the number of tourists who visited Zimbabwe fell to 298,040. The industry remained in decline during 1984, when a new parastatal organization, the Zimbabwe Tourist Development Corporation (ZTDC) was to begin operations. The corporation was to take over the service functions of the existing tourist board, and was also to make direct investments in the industry.

Public Holidays

1985: 1 May (Workers' Day), 25 May (Africa Day, anniversary of OAU's foundation), 11–12 August (Heroes' Day), 25–26 December (Christmas).

1986: 1 January (New Year), 18 April (Independence Day), 28–31 March (Easter).

Directory

The Constitution

The Constitution of the Republic of Zimbabwe took effect at independence on 18 April 1980.

THE REPUBLIC

Zimbabwe is a sovereign republic and the Constitution is the supreme law.

DECLARATION OF RIGHTS

The declaration of rights guarantees the fundamental rights and freedoms of the individual, regardless of race, tribe, place of origin, political opinions, colour, creed or sex.

THE PRESIDENT

Each candidate for the Presidency shall be nominated by not fewer than 10 members of the House of Assembly; if only one candidate is nominated that candidate shall be declared to be elected without the necessity of a ballot. Otherwise, a ballot shall be held amongst an electoral college consisting of the members of the House of Assembly and the Senate. The President shall hold office for six years and shall be eligible for re-election. The President shall be Head of State and Commander-in-Chief of the Defence Forces.

PARLIAMENT

Parliament shall consist of a Senate and a House of Assembly. The Senate shall consist of 40 Senators: 14 shall be elected by an electoral college consisting of those members of the House of Assembly elected by voters registered on the common roll and 10 by those members elected by voters on the separate white roll; five shall be Chiefs in Mashonaland elected by an electoral college consisting of those Chiefs in Mashonaland who are members of the Council of Chiefs, and five shall be Chiefs in Matabeleland, similarly elected; the remaining six members shall be appointed by the President. The House of Assembly shall consist of 100 members, to be elected by universal adult suffrage from 80 common roll constituencies and 20 white roll constituencies. The life of the Parliament shall ordinarily be five years.

Amendments to the Constitution must have the approval of not less than two-thirds of the members of the Senate and not fewer than 70 members of the House of Assembly. In addition, amendments to entrenched clauses relating to the representation of whites require the approval of all the members of the House of Assembly.

THE EXECUTIVE

Executive authority shall be vested in the President, who acts on the advice of the Cabinet. The President shall appoint as Prime Minister the person who is considered to be best able to command the support of the majority of members of the House of Assembly. The President, acting on the advice of the Prime Minister, shall appoint other Ministers and Deputy Ministers, to be members of the Cabinet.

OTHER PROVISIONS

An Ombudsman shall be appointed by the President, acting on the advice of the Judicial Service Commission, to investigate complaints against actions taken by employees of the government or of a local authority.

Chiefs shall be appointed by the President, and shall form a Council of Chiefs from their number in accordance with customary principles of succession.

Other provisions relate to the Judicature, Defence and Police Forces, public service and finance.

* In a separate poll of the white electorate on 14 February 1980, to fill the 20 guaranteed European seats in the new House, all 20 Rhodesian Front (subsequently known as Republican Front, now known as Conservative Alliance of Zimbabwe) candidates were elected. However, in March 1982 nine Republican Front MPs resigned the party whip to sit as Independents, and by March 1985, following three by-elections and a defection to an independent group, the Conservative Alliance (CAZ) held only seven seats. The ruling ZANU–PF party held 58 seats, ZAPU held 18 seats (two of its members having left the party during 1984, one to join ZANU, one to sit as an Independent), and there was one Independent MP.

Judicial System

The legal system is Roman-Dutch, based on the system which was in force in the Cape of Good Hope on 10 June 1891, as modified by subsequent legislation.

The Supreme Court has original jurisdiction in matters in which an infringement of Chapter III of the Constitution defining fundamental rights is alleged. In all other matters it has appellate jurisdiction only. It consists of the Chief Justice and three Judges of Appeal. A normal bench consists of any three of these.

The High Court consists of 12 judges, headed by the Judge President. Below the High Court are Regional Courts, with civil jurisdiction and Magistrates' Courts with both civil and criminal jurisdiction presided over by full-time professional magistrates.

In February 1981 the Customary Law and Primary Courts Bill was passed, which planned to integrate the customary law courts of rural areas into the country's formal legal system. By 1982 1,100 village and 50 community courts had been set up.

Chief Justice: ENOCH DUMBUTSHENA.

Judges of Appeal: A. R. GUBBAY, C. E. L. BECK.

Judge President: (vacant).

RAILWAYS

Trunk lines run from Bulawayo south through Botswana to the border with the Republic of South Africa, connecting with the South African Railways system; north-west to the Victoria Falls, where there is a connection with Zambia Railways; and north-east to Harare and Mutare connecting with the Mozambique Railways' line from Beira. From a point near Gweru, a line runs to the south-east, making a connection with the Mozambique Railways' Limpopo line and with the port of Maputo. A connection runs from Rutenga to the South African Railways system at Beitbridge. Electrification of the rail link between Gweru and Harare (445 km of track) was completed by mid-1983. There are plans to electrify the route from Harare to Maputo by the mid-1990s. In 1984 lines totalled 3,394 km. The section from Bulawayo to Victoria Falls is still operated with steam locomotives.

National Railways of Zimbabwe: POB 596, Metcalfe Square, Bulawayo; tel. 72211; telex 3173; f. 1899, reconstituted 1967 when joint operation by Rhodesia and Zambia ceased and each became responsible for its own system; Chair. Rev. J. SIYACHITEMA; Gen. Man. JOHN AVERY.

ROADS

The road system in Zimbabwe totalled 170,400 km in 1982, of which 40,400 km were designated main and secondary roads.
